

New, Expanded Courier Next Week

The Courier-Journal family is growing.

In a special preview of things to come with next week's new tabloid Courier, the paper this week begins its "Know Your Faith," a special new series designed to keep Catholics abreast with their Church in relation to the changing times.

"Know Your Faith" will be featured by regular contributions from three of the Church's leading theologian-writers, Father Walter M. Abbott, Father Joseph Champlin and Father Richard Mc-Brien.

Father Abbott will write on Scripture, Father Champlin on Liturgy and Father McBrien will answer questions concerning the Second Vatican Council.

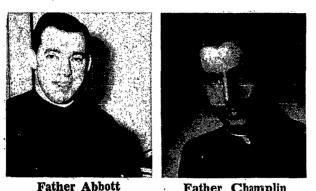

(These articles appear today on Page 8.)

These writers are the regulars in the new weekly series which begin a seven-week discussion of "faith" in next week's new Courier.

The series on faith will be keynoted by Dr. Monika Hellwig, who teaches in the Religious Education Department of Georgetown University in Washington, D.C., and by Father John Byrne of St. Louis who teaches catechetics at Cardinal Glennon College in St. Louis.

Frank Morriss, widely known author and lecturer, also will join the Courier family in the new tabloid next week.

The Courier-Journal is planning to include other established writers representing various viewpoints for a balanced presentation of thought for our readers.

Another new feature in next week's tabloid will be the first in a new centerfold photo feature series concentrating not only on diocesan institutions and events but also covering other aspects of modern life, utilizing modern photojournalistic techniques.

Another pleasant surprise is in store for Courier-Journal readers. With the advent of the tabloid format, the paper will be in your hands on Wednesdays instead of Fridays, thus affording extra weekday reading time.

With an eye to reading comfort, the "tab" will have a second section set up on an easy pullout style.

With a magazine appearance, it will concentrate on entertainment features.

The Courier will add a weekly book review column, written by Father John S. Kennedy, nationally known critic. Father Kennedy doesn't limit himself to "church" books, although they are included in his coverage. He reviews books of a wide spectrum of interests, including novels.

Abortion Law Repeal Loses By 3 Votes in Assembly

Albany — Abortion by demand is dead at least temporarily although proponents vow to secure a new Assembly vote before adjournment this year.

The bill failed to garner the 76 votes needed in the State Assembly with 73 in favor and 70 opposed. The measure would allow a licensed doctor to permit an abortion at the request of any pregnant woman before the sixth month of pregnancy. It represented a slightly amended version of the Dominick bill which passed the Senate two weeks earlier.

If the Assembly had approved the measure it would have gone back to the Senate for expected passage and then to Gov. Rockefeller for his signature before it became law. He had indicated his approval earlier.

How They Voted

Voting against the bill, the State Catholic Committee reported, were Raymond J. Lill and Frank Carroll of Rochester; George Michaels, Auburn; Frederick L. Warder, Geneva, and James L. Emery, Geneseo.

Voting to accept the bill were Donald C. Shoemaker of Webster; S. William Rosenberg, Rochester; William M. Steinfeldt, Rochester; Don W. Cook, Henrietta; L. Richard Marshall, Elmira: Charles D. Henderson, Hornell: Joseph Finley, Walworth, and Constance E. Cook, Ithaca.

Edward Golden, state Right-to-Life chairman, cautioned that the bill

Duryea, however, did not vote, and also ruled that the votes of the other two members weren't acceptable under Assembly rules. This ruling weathered a challenge from the floor.

Mission Work 'A Must' Bishop Hogan Declares

The Church will die if it changes its missionary role, Bishop Hogan said this week as he left for an 18day visit to six Latin American posts served by priests and Sisters from this diocese.

"Our diocese has no time limit on its plans to serve in the foreign missions," the Bishop declared. "I believe it is short-sighted to think that we need the Sisters and priests here at home more than the people of Latin America do. Many blessings will come to our diocese from their work.

"The more we make sacrifices, the more it blesses us. Giving to others improves ourselves."

Bishop Hogan, accompanied by his secretary, Father Michael Conboy, left Rochester at noon Monday and reached Rio de Janiero late Tuesday morning.

Changing planes, he flew inland that afternoon to Brasilia, the capital, and then on to Uberlandia, a city of 100,000 population where Rochester Sisters of St. Joseph are stationed in the poor parish of Bon Jesu. They work as parish visitors and catechists giving special help to young married couples,

He stayed in the rectory of the Oblate Fathers of Mary Immaculate who staff that parish. He knew several of the Fathers in this area because he had met them when they preached for the missions at his former parish, St. Margaret Mary in Rochester.

On Thursday the Bishop went 250 miles further to Paranaiguara, a city of 13,000 people. This mission, once called Mateira, was the original foundation of the St. Joseph Sisters in March, 1965. Five Sisters are based there now, three directing elementary schools and a junior high school and two others working in a mission

Marijuana: Another Hazard for GI's

By SUE CRIBARI

(NC News Service)

Washington — Marijuana may be an occupational hazard for American troops in Vietnam, a priest famous for helping addicts told a conference of 50 military chaplains here.

Father Dan Egan, a Graymoor Franciscan called "the junkie priest" because of his work among New York City's drug users, said without re-ferring directly to the alleged My Lai shootings:

"GI's who act out of all context may have been hopped up on mari-

Father Egan came to Washington for a symposium on "ministry to the drug user" at Walter Reed Army Medical Center. By coincidence, the meeting was a few days before the Senate subcommittee on juvenile de-linquency started hearings (March 24) on drug use in Vietnam.

The junkie priest said his "chal-lenge to the big brass" at the Walter Reed chaplains conference was this: if the armed forces are getting "the cream of American youth" and if there is a possibility of dope addiction because drugs are available in places like Vietnam, then the military has an obligation to return American youths to society in the same condition as when they enter-tion center for addicts in the armed forces," said Father Egan.

A Defense Department spokesman confirmed his assertion, saying individual doctors and military hospitals treat addicts but there is no longterm treatment unless an addict was wounded in action, in which case his drug problem is treated at the same time.

The spokesman said an addict can turn to federal treatment facilities after his military discharge. All three

Subject of the book "The Junkie Priest," now in its ninth printing, Father Egan has campaigned around the country for the opening of rehabilitation centers for drug addicts. He established the first "halfway house" in the United States for female addicts trying to kick the habit.

"Army installations are no different from any other typical American community," Father Egan said.

Servicemen at some bases can easily "pool their money and go into the next town and get grass," he said.

He said some men who served in Vietnam have told him: "We have no ice - and what good is liquor without ice? The beer is stale, and marijuana is available."

Defense Department spokesmen have consistently stated that drug use by the military is not statistically a serious problem. Recent Defense Department statistics record 6,490 marijuana investigations in Vietnam in 1969. This means investigation of about 15 men in every thousand. Figures for 1967 showed 1,267 marijuana investigations - one for about three men in a thousand.

Defense Department statistics for hard narcotics are lower, The number of cases investigated in 1967 was 89, increasing to 243 in 1969. Both figures represent less than one man per thousand investigated.
