aurn Prison: A Grim Parish with Hope

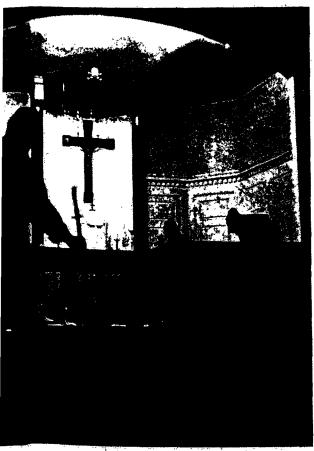

n Prison is 154 years old. For the past 11 years, ien incarcerated there have been served by a ly built priest, Father Clarence W. Gardner. As s job is "to replace criminal attitudes with well-Catholic attitudes."

rison is a maximum-security prison. The miniis one year. "And by the time most of our inve here, they've already been in several other s along the trail," Father Gardner said. Within of Auburn Prison the first electric chair for was developed. William Kemmler was its first g. 6, 1890.

m parish, but also one with hope. "If a man make a new future, he has the help available an continue his education—we have high school to a Regents diploma, and college courses by dence. He can qualify for parole by good bed, most important from by viewpoint, he can relife on moral and religious principles, if he real-o," Father Gardner said.

"What I like least is to see a familiar face returning to prison. It makes me wonder if I've failed him in some way. But I know enough men now who are out, who have gone straight after leaving here, and whose lives look promising for the future, to keep up my confidence."

we made most of our chapel shrines, staand we feel they've done a fine job."

"If I can persuade a man to build his attitudes on religious motivation, he won't turn to crime to solve his problems."
