

Pope Praises Ecumenical Efforts

Vatican City — (NC) — An ecumenical and international conference on the problems of peace, duties of modern Christians and basic human rights concluded with a Papal audience after a week-long meeting in the village of Nemi, south-east of Rome.

Convened by the Pontifical Commission for Justice and Peace and the World Council of Churches, the 55 delegates were commended by Pope Paul for their ecumenical ventures.

Msgr. Joseph Gremillion, secretary of the commission, said that the highlight of the meeting was the ecumenical cooperation pledged by Church leaders.

Citing the specifics, Msgr. Gremillion said the conference dealt with the ecumenical cooperation for the second decade of development, for the '70s, soon to be announced by the United Nations.

"This will be an effort," he said, "to educate the Christian as a citizen to support the necessary legislation to bring about the necessary changes in the world's economic system." He implied that this legislation would be aimed at trade, aid and monetary measures to "promote international social justice as well as aid and development."

Ecumenism shared the spotlight with efforts at attaining peace. Msgr. Gremillion stated that the conference considered the dangers not only of the nuclear race, but the growing attitude of nations to think they can settle problems in a military manner. He said they discussed the growing abuse of human rights in the introduction of torture and oppression, but he did not single out any particular nation.

Pope Paul told delegates to strive for the "unity we are endeavoring to reach together." He added that their concern "to serve the human family in the name of the same gospel is already a sign of a concord realized in our hearts."

The Holy Father for the second time in a week spoke of the poverty in the world and the need for equity between the rich nations and the poor nations.

Delegates came from Russia, Lebanon and a number of European countries and the United States. In addition, there were delegates from the World Council of Churches and the pontifical commission for justice and peace.

Nuclear Power: It's not kids' stuff

But you and your kids will love learning about it.

Nuclear power is a tremendous source of electricity in an age when the demand for electricity is expected to double in 8 to 10 years. At RG&E's beautiful Brookwood Science Information Center, animated displays, films, and lectures by Brookwood staff members will help you and your children understand how electricity is produced from nuclear power.

For family fun and education this weekend, visit the Brookwood Science Information Center. Admission is free.

Brookwood open today 10 A.M.-4 P.M.
Regular hours: Wed.-Sun., 10 A.M.-4 P.M.
Address: Lake Road, Ontario, N.Y.
