A Soldier's Solace . . . Sunday Morning Mass

The rigors of Army basic training have sharpened one GI's appreciation of the liberty he enjoys at Mass; specifically, "the freedom to sit, kneel, stand, pray and receive Communion without asking permission or without being commanded to do so."

That 45 minutes on Sunday morning offers "our only chance to realize that we are a Christian community as well as a military one," a parishioner wrote from training camp to Father Edward J. Lintz, pastor of Nativity Church, Brockport.

The soldier's letter was presented, in part, in a recent Sunday bulletin. The writer was not identified.

"I want the civilian parishioners to understand that attending Mass, even in these hot summer months, is the freest and most generous gift we ever could have received," the soldier wrote.

"No matter what freedoms we have or don't have outside of Church, God has offered us a chance not only to worship Him, but also to be ourselves as Christian individuals. For those in the service, Sunday morning worship is the most meaningful part of the entire week.

"I want those who have trouble deciding whether or not they should attend Mass to think of a soldier, any soldier, and go to Mass with his mind and spirit. Let Mass be an extension of the freedoms you are fortunate enough to have during the week, rather than a duty to get over with on a hot day."
