A Look at S. Vietnam Election Process

By FR. PATRICK J. BURKE

Saigon — (NC) — Amid charges that the legislature has been subverted and that President Nguygen Van Thieu is preparing to stuff the ballot boxes to elect his candidates, South Vietnam is getting ready to elect half its 60-member Senate on Aug. 30.

There are 18 lists with 10 candidates each on them, making a total of 180 candidates for 30 seats.

are elected at large; that is, people in all parts of the coun-try vote for the lists. All 10 on a list are elected or all fail. Thus, the vote will select three lists from the 18.

Elected in September 1967, the present Senate held a lottery in December 1969, to decide who would receive six-year terms and who three-year terms.

Four of the six bloc leaders and all four retired generals in the Senate lost out in the lot-In South Vietnam, senators tery and had to take three-year terms. One of these, Tran Van Don, is not seeking re-election because he maintains that President Thieu has so subverted the legislature that opposition can be more effective outside the Senate.

Don was regarded as guide and counsellor to Lt. Gen. Du-ong Van Minh, "Big Minh," the nominal head of the government that came to power after the murder of South Vietnam's first President, Ngo Dinh Diem, in November 1963. That regime proved so ineffective that Gen.

Nguyen Khanh replaced them in January 1964 without firing a shot.

Since candidates are elected at large, balance is important in the composition of a list. Each list usually includes persons born in various parts of the country and even in North Vietnam, representatives of different religions and of the more important ethnic groups.

A typical list is therefore made up of a candidate from North Vietnam, one from the Lodge Reports War Prisoners Pope's Concern

Washington, D.C. -(RNS)-President Nixon's personal rep-resentative at the Vatican, Henry Cabot Lodge, told news-men that Pope Paul had shown 'very strong, very sympathetic interest" in the plight of American prisoners held by Hanoi.

He noted that the Vatican had no diplomatic ties with the North Vietnamese government, but observed, "There are all kinds of ways" for the Pope to exert influence on the prisoners of war issue.

"I think you're going to see something as time goes on," he added.

central part of the country, one from Saigon or the Mekong River Delta region, a Buddhist, a member of the Hoa Hoa or Cao Dai sects, a Catholic and a Montagnard tribesman.

Often a single candidate will have several of these qualifications. Sen. Nguyen Gia Hien, for example, is a northerner and a Catholic who draws a. large vote from fellow refugees living in the Honai area north of Saigon.

Many observers think the strongest list is the one that includes the much respected former prime minister, Tran Van Huong, and the president of the Senate, Nguyen Van Huyen, perhaps Vietnam's most respected Catholic layman. Huyen will receive heavy support from Catholics in the Saigon area, while Huong will be supported in Saigon and his area of origin. the Mekong Delta.

Among the 180 candidates are 44 Catholics. Catholics head six lists and appear on five other lists. One list is composed entirely of Catholics.

Opponents and critics of Thieu are accusing him of preparing to stuff the ballot boxes to elect his own candidates or those of parties that generally support his policies.

The Central Election Committee is now determining whether the credentials of the candidates meet the provisions of the election laws.

Chavez, Teamsters Work Out Dispute

Salinas, Calif. -- (RNS) --With another assist from the special committee established by the Catholic hierarchy, Cesar Chavez's farm workers and the Teamsters have been able to work out an agreement in their jurisdictional dispute here.

A pact was signed Aug. 12 between the Western Conference of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters and the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee concerning Msgr. George G. Higgins, director of the Division of Urban Life of the United States Catholic Conference, a committee consultant, and Msgr. Roger Mahony, director of Catholic Charities for the Diocese of Fresno, committee secretary.

According to Msgr. Higgins, the bishop's committee regarded the agreement "as a truly historical document in the annals of farm labor and are fully confident that it will work for the mutual benefit of all concerned, growers and workers alike.
