Sometimes that's the way the old check bounces.

If you've never had a check bounce—ever—then you're either too young or too old to know what checking accounts are all about.

Accidental overdrafts are occasional facts of life.

And, since our checking accounts are free—absolutely free—it happens once in a while with our own good customers. What the heck.

We're all human.

Now, there are other banks who also say their checking accounts are free. But if, say, in order to enjoy this privilege, you've got to qualify for a transferrable line of credit, then it isn't free.

With that sort of arrangement, they'll cover your overdrafts. Mmm hmm. To the tune of up to 18% a year interest on funds transferred to your account.

We think it's a pretty sneaky way to make money on their customers' money. Free? Ha.

We extend lines of credit, sure.

But it's not a requirement for our free checks.

Say you've got one of our free checking accounts.

And you accidentally overdraw. The first thing we'll do is call you and let you know that you made a baddy. Then we'll give you a little time to make your checks good.

Your checks will still be free. No service charges, as many personalized checks as you want or need, free monthly statements, no minimum balances, free bank-by-mail postage.

We're darned if we'll charge you for the use of your own money.

Don't get us wrong. We're bankers and good ones. We'd hardly encourage overdrafts—but we'll do our level best to protect you if it happens.

We're still the only privately owned and governed bank in the city—

even if we are the littlest. That's why we're free to do things other banks can't afford to do.

So why not take something for nothing?
