

Kids Getting Boot Out of Soccer

By WHIT JOHNSON

At Aquinas Institute soccer is finding new and increased popularity among the Fall sports. The Dewey Avenue school added varsity soccer to its athletic program three years ago. This year a full schedule of junior varsity games are being played as well.

According to Dave Missell, making his coaching debut this season, more boys are beginning to realize that soccer demands highly developed individual skills and intricate team play, comparable to football, basketball and baseball. To prove his point, the agile mentor scrimmages with his team, kicking, trapping, dribbling, heading and tackling like a pro.

John Uriah, athletic director at Aquinas, thinks soccer is a natural for high schools. He points out that this internationally popular game is inexpensive to run and provides vigorous physical activity, as well as excellent competitive experience for boys, regardless of age or size.

Soccer, which has become the world's number one sport, played by more than 90 nations, received a real shot in the arm locally when the Rochester-based Lancers won the national championship, playing all home games at Aquinas Stadium. Aquinas boys have had an opportunity to see the pros in action. Give them a couple of years and chances are one or more Aquinas boys will be wearing the Lancer uniform.

Aquinas Stadium Still Alive

The hopes of retaining Aquinas Stadium had a shot in the arm last week with several announcements.

First, Joseph Lusardi, director of the War Memorial, suggested to the County Legislature that the county should buy the 25-year-old structure and that his staff could handle the bookings along with the Memorial functions.

Next the County Legislature recommended to its finance committee that a study be made on the possibilities of the

Dominican Sister Chemistry Chief At Keuka College

Keuka Park — A Dominican Sister from the Adrian, Mich., congregation has been named chairman of the chemistry department at Keuka College. She is Dr. Marian M. Stimson, the first of several of her order to teach in non-denominational colleges.

Dr. Stimson joined the Keuka faculty a year ago, after completing a research project at Florida State. She taught at her congregation's Siena Heights College in Adrian for 30 years, heading its natural science division for 20 years. She is a trustee of Siena Heights and has been elected to the executive committee of the General Chapter of the Dominican Generalate in Adrian.

Then the Aquinas Board of Trustees extended its mandate to its Resource Committee until Dec. 1. The two private parties that submitted firm purchase offers have agreed to the extension.

The Aquinas Board of Trustees made it clear it was pleased to give the extension but emphasized that its primary responsibility is to meet the financial commitments of the school.
