Private Schools a 'Must' Area Coordinator Says

Private schools should be preserved because they provide alternatives to the "depersonalization" of public education and also offer more possibilities for curriculum experimentation.

This is the view of Franklin L. Kamp, curriculum coordinator for the Rochester Diocesan Association of Secondary School Administrators.

Kamp serves as a "resource person" for Catholic high schools in the diocese, particularly in the field of curriculum planning. His office is at St. Joseph Business High School on Rochester's Franklin Street.

Among his current concerns is an endeavor to set up a drug education program. He said, a committee, including students, has been formed to plan the program.

He has conducted curriculum workshops for the faculties of Aquinas Institute and Cardinal Mooney High School, and is planning one for the St. Agnes High School faculty in February. He is also cooperating with the diocesan confraternity of Christian Doctrine in a series of monthly meetings for the high school's theology department directors. He hopes soon to have a workshop for heads of mathematics departments.

In efforts to keep abreast of changes in educational methods, Kamp's office mails monthly bulletins to the high schools. He also represents the association in meetings in Albany and other parts of the state.

Kamp undertook his present position last May after an extended educational background. A Rochester native, he attended St. Andrew's Parochial School, Portland Avenue, Aquinas Institute and St. John Fisher College. He received his master's degree in history from the University of Rochester. He taught at St. Andrew's Seminary for seven years before becoming dean of studies at King's Prep School in 1967. While there he developed several innovative programs.

Buy Mt. Carmel, Auburn Urged

Auburn — Auburn school superintendent Dr. John Mullen said last week he plans to recommend the purchase of the former Mt. Carmel High School building by the Board of Education.

Dr. Mullen said there is no question of need for the additional facilities. The school board went on record last year as being interested in purchasing the Mt. Carmel building and directed a five-year survey of enrollment trends and recommendations for use of the structure.

Mt. Carmel was closed last June principally because of a decline in enrollment.

Pupils to Join In Tribute To Dr. King

More than 20 pupils of Immaculate Conception and St. Lucy's Schools will join with the Black Caucus Ensemble of Colgate Rochester Divinity School in a memorial tribute to Dr. Martin Luther King at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, Jan. 14, in Immaculate Conception Hall.

The 20-voice Colgate choir is directed by Darryl Snaw. Arrangements for the program were made by Mrs. David Wethers, teacher in the primary department at St. Lucy's.

During the program, three Immaculate Conception pupils will read portions of public statements by Dr. King. They are Handy Slade, eighth grader, Terry Russell, seventh, and Gary Killings, sixth.

Business School to Close, Unable to Meet Debts

Closing of St. Joseph's Business High School next June has become necessary because of the inability of the Redemptorist Fathers and St. Joseph's Church to continue to meet debt payments and operating deficits.

This announcement was made Monday by the Very Rev. Albert J. Riesner, CSSR, pastor of St. Joseph's Church, on behalf of the Very Rev. Joseph L. Kerins, CSSR, of Brooklyn, provincial of the Baltimore Province of the Redemptorists.

Started as a parish school in 1904, the school grew through the years, undertook a four-year program in 1966 with construction of its present building on Franklin Street next to St. Joseph's Church. It is staffed by six School Sisters of Notre Dame and seven lay teachers, and has an enrollment of 270 girls. Tuition was raised to $400 last September.

Final cost of construction and furnishings, Father Riesner pointed out, was $1,750,000. During the last five years, payment on debt service has come from the Redemptorist Fathers and St. Joseph's Church. The Redemptorists have contributed $500,000, and the parish treasury depletion must be halted since all income will be needed for repairs or restoration of the more than century-old church structure.

Father Reisner noted that every effort will be made by the Diocese to provide for continued Catholic education of present students in other Catholic high schools in the area.

HOLY NAME PARISH
