Legislature Approves Silent Prayer in Schools

Albany — (RNS) — The state legislature, in another attempt to restore some form of prayer in public schools, approved a measure that permits a brief period of silent prayer or reflection at the beginning of each school day.

The bill passed the Senate, 39 to 14, after approved by the Assembly, and it now goes to Gov. Rockefeller where it faces an uncertain future.

In 1950, the so-called Regents' prayer, a generalized acknowledgement of God and man's relation to the deity, was passed by the legislature and signed into law by Gov. Thomas Dewey. It was ruled unconstitutional in 1962.

The new silent prayer bill passed the Senate despite protests by opponents that it was an unconstitutional attempt to institutionalize religion in New York.

Gov. Rockefeller has given no indication of his stand. If he signs the bill, it will undoubtedly be sent to the courts almost immediately.

The bill would permit public school teachers to conduct periods of silent prayer or reflection during home room classes each day. It also would require teachers to conduct such sessions if the local school board should order it.

Sen. Bernard C. Smith (R-Suffolk), chief sponsor of the measure, pointed out that the bill states quite specifically the silent period "is not intended to be, and shall not be conducted as a religious service or exercise, but shall be considered as an opportunity for silent prayer or meditation on a religious theme by those . . . so disposed . . ."

Indicted Nun Says of War That Church and State Are Wed

Wilmington, Del. — (RNS) — Charging "conviction before indictment, really," a Roman Catholic nun who is part of the alleged "Harrisburg 6" conspiracy lashed out here at the widespread "invasion of privacy" in the U.S.

"What is freedom all about when one out of every eight citizens has his or her name in the national security files?" she asked.

Sister Elizabeth McAlister, a Marymount Sacred Heart Sister from New York is one of six indicted for allegedly conspiring to kidnap a Presidential aide and blow up federal property. She addressed a standing room crowd at the First Unitarian Church. Her talks are aimed at raising money for her defense fund.

Speaking of her two deepest concerns, the war in Vietnam and the repression of private citizens, she blamed American involvement entirely on "economic self-interest."

She charged that the war gets more violent as it is "winding down," as the U.S. gets into three countries, and as it bombs North Vietnam again. "Vietnamization merely means we're mechanizing the war and changing the color of the dead," she said.

Turning to the indictment leveled against herself and five others, including three Catholic priests, the nun said she and the others knew they were always watched. She admitted her involvement with protesters who destroyed draft records, asserting that "you take a personal risk and try to speak in a symbolic act." The goal, she added, is trying to create a citizenry "responsible for their lives, . . . their government, . . . to others. . . . Some people only cast votes."

Sister McAlister said the history of protest against civil authorities is "predominantly religious."

"The act of Christ throwing the money changers out of the Temple was so influential," she said, that each of the Gospel writers saw fit to write about it.

But she considers that today there has been a "wedding of church and state" with church officials blessing the efforts of government and the military. "Man's or Christ's law—which will you have?" she asked.
