

Father Bill Donnelly drinks coffee in the service of Christ. As chaplain at Monroe Community College, and director of its Newman Club chapter, his work involves him constantly with students in their spare moments. Whenever he has the chance, this vibrant priest will drop into the college cafeteria to chat with the little clusters of students always gathered there.

His oblique approach to evangelism has about it an experimental quality; Father Donnelly would not wish to leave Monroe Community until his programs have had a chance to be evaluated. Less than two years have passed since he arrived at the college as its first full-time chaplain.

The constant contact he has with the college population leads Father Donnelly to believe that many students who do not belong to a church still have
