CARMEN VIGLUCCI

The Slot Man

If you'll remember from last week's episode, your editor recently found himself at the Catholic Press Association meeting in Houston, Texas, afraid to fly home.

Anthony J. Costello, general manager of the Courier, was his roommate for the trip. In his plight, the editor turned to Costello as a source of sympathy and solace and told this pillar of understating of his decision to check out the trains.

"You're crazy," sweet-talked the general manager.

But calls were made and even the editor had to admit that trains were out. For instance, if you take one going through Chicago, it doesn't stop at Rochester. Not even Buffalo. Not even East Rochester. It goes on to New York City at which point you double back to hit upstate garden spots.

"You'll just have to fly," Costello said. He had made up his own mind to return by air.

It seemed so but then a flash of brilliance struck the editor (it was the first time this had happened since he fell into a bullring and his steel-trap mind told him instantly (to get the hell out of there).

"I'll take the bus!" he burst forth.

"THE BUS! You're out of your mind," sympathized Costello.

The editor checked. Yes, it was possible. Buses leave daily. They leave twice daily. They are air conditioned. They only take two days to make the trip. They have rest rooms.

All this was announced to the GM.

"THE BUS! Are you kidding?"

"But it only costs $60."

"You know," the general manager reassumed his soothing voice. "That's not such a bad idea after all."

We told other delegates, One, Leo Carroll of the Paterson, N.J. Beacon, remarked:

"THE BUS! Are you kidding?"

Tom White of the New York Catholic News put it another way.

"Are you kidding? THE BUS?"

Ralph Kraft of the Cleveland Universe-Bulletin who probably will never win his wings either, understood the problem. He just said, "Are you kidding?"

So anyway, leaving Thursday, a day earlier than planned, so he could make Sunday Mass at home, the editor, luggage and all, found himself ready to board the bus at the Houston depot.

The driver looked capable, mature, self-composed. The editor handed him the ticket. The driver looked at him and said:

"ROCHESTER, N.Y.! Are you kidding?"

Next week the final piece in this exciting series will deal with the editor's two-day slice of Americana entitled "A Fool and His Luggage Are Soon Parted."

SCHOOL BOARD

St. Monica's Church recently elected three parishioners to its school board. They are: Pat Sammon, of Congress Ave., who is in medical research at the University of Rochester; John Trudeau of Melrose St., who is a program analyst at the Rochester Telephone Company; and Mrs. Anna Uebelacker of Terrace Pk., a housewife and librarian. The school teaches more than 440 children.

Pepsi's got a lot to give!

When you want a Pepsi, you want it fast; you want it cold. And nothing lets the chill get into Pepsi quicker than cans. Cans are rugged enough for picnics, hikes or overnights. They're light, easy to carry. Put 'em in a pack. Cool 'em in a stream. Whenever you want Pepsi-Cola the convenient, quick-chilling way, get it in cans.

Get it colder quicker in cans.

You've got a lot to live. Pepsi's got a lot to give.
