"SARAH CHILD All In The Family"

I must have been in high school when some savant among my classmates pointed out that any time I was questioned as to the authorship of one or another well-known sayings my reply should be "Benjamin Franklin."

I would, said my tutor, be correct at least 75 per cent of the time. For such, he instructed, were the qualities of the man.

I was reminded of this last week while reading a condensed version of Franklin's "Autobiography." Much of whatever I had read about this great American I had forgotten and it tickled me anew to read that he was the 15th of 17 children. (Not too long ago a psychiatrist favoring strict birth control measures for the world claimed that where there more than two children in a family, the kids aren't likely to amount to much.)

Franklin, with only a year of formal schooling, taught himself everything he knew in science, philosophy, languages and as a statesman.

His "Poor Richard's Almanack" was the first publishing success in America. He started it at 26. At 78 he invented bifocals.

In between he discovered electricity, identifying the postitive and negative concepts, started the first circulating library, invented the Franklin stove, was responsible for inventing the dual system of state governments united under a federal authority, engineered the Senate-House compromise plan to satisfy both small states which wanted equal representation and big states which wanted representation according to population.

There is more, but what I find most interesting are all the philosophical gems he left us.

Here are a few:

- Remember that time is money.

- God helps them that help themselves.

- Early to bed and early to rise, makes a man healthy, wealthy and wise.

- Little strokes fell great oaks.

- He that goes a borrowing, goes a sorrowing.

- A word to the wise is enough, and many words won't fill a bushel.

- We must all hang together, or assuredly we shall all hang separately.

- Here Skugg lies snug as a bug in a rug.
