More Local Freedom Seen For Nuns' Communities

Atlanta—(RNS) — Nuns will have "more freedom and self-determination" at the local level in the near future, according to a Vatican priest participating in the current reform of canon law.

Father Mark Said, dean of the faculty of canon law at the Pontifical University of St. Thomas Aquinas in Rome, told some 600 delegates to a national assembly of the newly-named Leadership Conference of Women Religious (LCWR) that canon law should provide only "guidelines," to local institutes.

The priest's remarks were made during the six-day assembly of the organization formerly known as the Conference of Major Superiors of Women, made up of superiors of all sisterhoods in the U.S., representing more than 160,000 Catholic nuns.

(Mother Agnes Cecilia Troy, Mother General of the Sisters of St. Joseph and Sister Mary Judith Heberle, Superior General of the Sisters of Mercy, represented their Rochester congregations. During the week, Mother Agnes Cecilia attended a federation meeting of the Sisters of St. Joseph. Sister Mary Judith attended a two-day executive council meeting of the Federation of the Sisters of Mercy of the Americas, of which she is the newly elected secretary.)

Speakers included George Cardinal Flahiff, Archbishop of Winnipeg, member of the Sacred Congregation for Religious; Father Gregory Baum of the University of Toronto, and Father Richard P. McBrien of Boston College.

Resolutions of the convention called for representation of women at the Bishops' Synod in Rome; involvement of religious women in developing pastoral statements on policies affecting Catholic education in the U.S.; membership of American sisters in the Sacred Congregation for Religious to share in the decision-making that affects their lives, and active participation of sisters in the revision of Canon Law.

They called for collaboration with the Conference of Major Superiors of Men and the Canon Law Society of America in working out structures of due process relating to women religious and for members of CMSW working with these groups in studying questions of transfers of religious between congregations.
