U.N. China Vote Termed Unjust

Vatican City — (RNS) — Three bishops and an American layman were critical of the expelling of Nationalist China from the United Nations during the last day of debate in the Synod of Bishops on Justice in the World.

The American was James J. Norris, a lay member of the special secretariat on world justice. He is assistant director of Catholic Relief Services.

Bishop Joseph Kuo, president of the Episcopal Conference of Taiwan, told the Synod that some word is expected from it on the injustice which, he said, had been committed against the Republic of China by the United Nations. He was seconded by Bishop Xavier La-Bayen of the Philippines, who said the United Nations' action should make the Church reflect more closely on its own collaboration with the world organization.

Bishop Anthony Galvin of Malaysia-Singapore asked what can now be done about the "many millions of persons on Taiwan."

"What can we say to help them," he asked, "after all that has been said about justice?"

In his own intervention, the last of the discussions before the Synod on the theme of justice, Norris said the U.N. deserved support in its mission of peace and justice.

The American layman went on: "It is disappointing to witness the expulsion of a nation which was a founding member of the United Nations and which has upheld its obligations. The United Nations, as an expression of world solidarity, should not be a club which votes members in or out at will."

"It should be an expression of the world community and all nations which, de facto, exist should be members, if the organization is to be a forum for the world community."

Earlier, at a press conference, Cardinal John Krol of Philadelphia expressed surprise at the expulsion of Nationalist China. He said he felt the General Assembly's vote was not made simply on the merits of the case but as an expression of resentment against the U.S.
