

Splash, Splatter, Paint and Daub

Eighth graders at Holy Cross school got their teachers and parents to join in a cooperative effort to brighten up dreary walls in their school.

Each teacher and class got together to pick a color for their room, and then on Saturday, Feb. 19 volunteers from the fathers, students and teachers came to the school, and in a marathon oneday painting session completed four classrooms.

The students previously had raised $160 to buy the paint by holding a baked food sale.

Ed Tydings, above, father of one of the 8th graders looks up from the paint tray while doing baseboard trim in one of the classrooms.

Wearing an old blouse to guard against stray drops of paint, Mary Morgan, top right, works on a section of the wall.

The signs of hard work are all over the pants of teacher James McGee as he prepares to brighten the upper part of a wall.
