Molds to the Moon in Hornell

Hornell — From molds to the moon would describe the science projects shown last week at the Mini-Science Fair at St. Ann's School. Projects were developed and explained by students in the first, fourth and fifth grades.

Top prizes went to James Tracy, Jeffrey Falzoi, Michael DeGaetano and Anthony Madau. Tracy, a first grader at St. Ann's, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Tracy. His project was on the senses.

Jeffrey Falzoi and Michael DeGaetano shared a trophy for their project on the solar system. Both fourth graders Jeffrey is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Salvadore Falzoi and Michael is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Vincent DeGaetano.

In the fifth grade, the top prize went to Anthony Madau, 11, son of Mr. and Mrs. Antonio Madau. Anthony demonstrated the workings of an artificial kidney machine. Second place ribbons went to Michael Colomaio, a first grader who studied earthworms; Christopher Giglio and Joseph Hillman, fourth graders who grew vegetables and fifth graders Peggy Dunning and Kathy Nasca who studied the digestive system. Third prizes were awarded tp Frank Schneider and Richard Kull in the first grade James Ciancaglini in the fourth grade and Mary Gallese and Cathy Racalto in the fifth grade.

Certificates were awarded to each participant by Sister Mary Ambrose, principal of the school. Father Louis Vasile awarded the trophies and ribbons. Judges were Mrs. Edward Deegan, Sister Mary Louis, Mrs. Florence Mehlenbacher, Mrs. Mary Kinnerney, Michelle O'Neil, Robert McClanahan, David Spitulnik and Michael Cippola.

Award Winner

Patricia Dean, daughter of Mrs. Donald Dean of Grand Street, Hornell, and the late Donald Dean, has been named "Candy Striper of the Year" at St. James Mercy Hospital. This is the second year in a row she has won the award. A student at Hornell High School, Patricia was chosen for her conscientious performance of duties, dependability, appearance and interest in the patients.
