

Indians Win Point

determine immediately how many were involved because the bones are bundled in ossuaries, a technical term for a mass re-burial of relatives.

When the bones are reburied, according to Miller, they are wrapped together in a "compact mass of bones." He theorized that relatives were usually reburied in this fashion.

Einhorn commented that Miller "deserves a professional spanking" for what Einhorn called having done "a foolish thing in removing the burial site."

Einhorn contended that osteological measurements can now be made more accurately after the bones have been uncovered, without removing them from the ground.

The incident reflects a growing determination among Indians to protect graves of prehistoric North Americans, according to Lazore and Einhorn. Skeletal remains on exhibit at the State Museum in Albany were removed last year, according to Einhorn, at the request of State Assemblyman Joseph Relly (R. — Glen Cove)
