Mayor Lindsay and a lot of other New Yorkers were shocked by a recent suggestion that the city fathers create a red light district. The thought behind the suggestion was that the towns of the Old West had a pretty good idea when they segregated all their whores, pimps, perverts and other human debris, thus keeping the rest of the town clean as a hound's tooth.

Nothing doing, said the Mayor in his best Marshal Dillon manner.

Well, the fact of the matter is that the Big Town has had a red light district for the better part of two decades. It is enclosed by the mythical walls of what once was known and revered as Broadway. It has stifled what once was the bedrock of the American theater, the boards on which trod the Barrymores, Cohans Lunts, Drews, Hayes, Cornells, Martins, Ziegfelds and Hammersteins.

A playgoer today, unless delivered to the door of a familiar old theater, must run a sordid gantlet of prostitutes and procurers of all shades and aggressiveness, addicts, pushers, hawkers for seedy brothels called massage parlors, beggars, punks in their tribal jackets and other personnel from a nightmare.

The noble statue of George M. Cohan, whose theatrical products were as clean as the Red, White and Blue, has for some years been besieged by scores of movie grinds showing sodden sex films 'round the clock. More recently, foul little shop-sized movie houses have introduced peep shows, featured now and then by "live performances."

Cohan's heirs should ask the city to move his statue to Central Park. The author of "Pigeons and People" would be lots better off with the pigeons.

Of late, the cops and courts have been more industrious in their efforts to clean up our red light (neon) district. One "massage parlor" — whose advertisements had been accepted by a local newspaper — was raided and guns and $17,000 in cash were seized. In a pre-holiday sweep of the area, three grind houses were briefly shut down and arrests made of some of their managers and ticket sellers. But when the police departed, carrying with them samples of the pornographic signs that adorned their fronts, business went on as usual.

The festering sore that is the Times Square area will not simply fold up and go away as a result of occasional forays by the forces of law and order. The only thing that could clean up the district would be a 30-ton bulldozer.

Another section of New York was the scene last week of an extraordinary feat of bravery. Courier-Journal

Democratic candidate George McGovern invaded the Wall Street area and spoke strongly in behalf of tax reforms. That was even more daring than his preaching amnesty and damning defense costs at the conventions of the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The fearless candidate told the Wall Street mob, right in the middle of their citadel, that he stood for slashing $22 billion off the traditional tax exemptions enjoyed by fat-cat corporations and individuals.

In the bleak hush that followed, at a luncheon given by the New York Society of Security Analysts, McGovern said that if elected he would tax all capital gains income exactly as other income is taxed; that he would eliminate the percentage depletion allowance for oil, gas and other mineral industries; repeal the liberal "depreciation" rulings on such things as "office equipment," and cut out the ruling that permits wealthy persons to escape taxes by deducting losses on their phony farm interests.

He escaped unharmed, and was last seen heading for his abortion speech at the annual convention of the Knights of Columbus.
