

Human Concern Study Outlined in Auburn

Auburn — "A main thing the church has to bring is its human resources, but many people with the desire to do something just don't know how to begin," explained Father Charles Mulligan from the Office of Human Development.

Father Mulligan was speaking at an orientation meeting at St. Mary's for parishioners interested in possible involvement in a seven-session training development course geared to assessment and more effective involvement in community concerns in Auburn.

The training course developed by Father Mulligan, Sister James, and Joseph Torma of the Office of Human Development is being offered in 12 parishes throughout the diocese this year. A prerequisite is that a parish have a parish council with an established human development committee.

"Education is the primary way to develop the young," Father explained, "but we see human development as on-going growth, concern for our own world and human circumstances in which we live."

"All have our own daily problems, but we also have had people in our lives who have changed the course of our lives," Father reflected. "There are the problems of loneliness, alienation, housing and many others in the community. This course is aimed at helping participants effect change."

Bishop to Lead 'Call to Renewal' In Auburn

Auburn — Bishop Joseph L. Hogan will "Call to Renewal" the people in the Auburn area at 7:30 p.m. Friday, Oct. 13 in a spirit of united prayer.

The Bishop has been asked by his people in the Movement for a Better World to come and "pray with them." As leader he will address members from different parishes on the goals and purpose of the Year of Renewal.

Those present at St. Aloysius hall will reflect all variations of thought and feeling in our Catholic faith. All will experience an example and direction for the future in the Bishop's message — "Watch and pray with me."

The public is invited.

'Keeping Busy' Bank Topic

"Keeping Busy" is the topic of the third seminar in the Marine Midland Bank series "Your Concern for the Senior Adult" today at the bank auditorium at One Marine Midland Plaza.

John J. McMaster and Russell C. McCarthy will co-chair the session and a panel will discuss gainful employment for senior citizens, opportunity for volunteer work, recreation and travel.

McMaster retired from Kodak and actively pursued his long-time interest in anthropology by enrolling for studies at the University of New Mexico and University of Madrid, Spain. He is with the Rochester Museum and Science Center in the anthropology section.

McCarthy is the retired head of the Industrial Management Council and former director of the War Manpower Commission for this region during World War II. He is actively involved with numerous committees and councils including the Rochester Rehabilitation Center, the Board of Education Advisory Board for Industrial and Vocational Training, and the National Labor Management Manpower Advisory Committee to the Department of Labor.

Parish Convention

All parish organizations participated in the first annual parish convention, held recently at Holy Cross Parish. Above, Mrs. Adriana Urtis, directs the parish Glee Club in song. Below, an open Parish Council meeting was held at which 186 parishioners elected new council members. Those elected are James Boehler, Charles Carson III, Clifford Joslin, Carl Masters Jr., Mrs Marcia Reynders.
