IC Housing Set to Open

IC Housing when they began planning in 1966.

They did not want to duplicate the other much criticized problem of Hanover Houses, the 20 year old housing project at Joseph Ave and Herman St.

"We feel Hanover Houses was a bad experience," said Dobson. "We wanted to get away from the stacking of families done in their high rises so we put only efficiencies, one and two-bedroom units in our high rise and the big stuff is on the ground."

Dobson feels, however, that high density living is what urban living is.

"But it need not be a bad experience. With proper management and proper design it can be good," he said.

And the man who will be largely responsible for making Urban Park good is Willie Bryant, the building manager. He has had a lot of experience in the housing field — good and bad — so he is aware of what it takes to make such a housing project a good experience for the residents, and surrounding neighbors.

Bonin Reposkey

Two members of the Society of the Precious Blood, David Bonin of Rochester and James M. Reposkey of Uniontown, Pa., have completed the orders special formation program and will receive final definitive incorporation into the order in a Mass Oct. 22 at Most Precious Blood in Rochester. Bonin entered the society in 1967 and is a third-year theology student at St. Bernard's Seminary. Reposkey entered the formation program in 1970 and also is in the third-year class at St. Bernard's. Their ordinations are scheduled in 1974.

What Do You Think

Of the United Nations?

By CHARLES RANDISI

On Oct. 24 the United Nations will officially be 27 years old. This is UN week, and on All Saints' Eve, thousands of kids will trick or treat for the United Nations Children's Fund.

Mother of Sorrows school hall on Thursday, Oct. 12 held a blood bank for people of Greece. I asked several donors there, "What do you think of the United Nations?"

"I think it serves as a good body for discussion," said Jim Black. "It's a place where friendly and divided nations can discuss their differences."

He said that the UN was good because "it's better for countries to talk about their problems than to ignore them." But, he added, that the UN should not be a "governing body," but a "meeting group."

Betty Bortell was not as optimistic. "I used to think the UN was really great, but I don't hold it in such high esteem anymore," she said. "If it's doing some good, then it should continue, but I think that other countries should give their share financially to support it as well as the United States does."

Sister Diane Muldoon, from St. Joseph's Villa, said, "It's a worthwhile thing, but it's not half as effective as it should be, because of the Communist bloc vote. UNESCO and the children's fund have been good, but politically they have not done very much. They don't have much teeth as a peace-keeping force, but they're the best we've got now. The UN shouldn't be scrapped."

"The UN has done some good," said Joan Preish, "and possibly it can do more in the future. It's good to have around."

Mrs. Raymond Lum was totally in favor of the UN. "It's great," she said. "There's nothing quite as effective. I feel that they definitely have power, and hopefully they can establish some kind of peace in the world."

Bernard Morrow disagreed with her. "It doesn't seem to be very effective anymore. When it first started, it was something. But when anything comes to a vote, too many countries block action because of their political views."

Mrs. John Hennen said, "The UN is a good thing. They're doing as much as they can under the circumstances. But with Russia's veto power, they can't do very much." She also said that a lot more could be accomplished.

"They don't enforce their regulations like they're supposed to," said Vincenzo Ciriello. "It's a good organization, but their police forces are controlled by the governments of the countries they're working in."

He felt that the UN should establish a police force made up of "international volunteers" that would be controlled solely by the UN. "Just like the French Foreign Legion," he said.

Lucille Beach said pointedly, "I think the United Nations is a beautiful building."

Disaster Loan Deadline Nears

"Many persons in the Corning-Elmira area are passing up as much as $5,000 in federal aid because they don't realize they qualify," said George McKean, branch manager of the Upstate New York Disaster Headquarters, today.

"These are persons," McKean said, "who suffered loss or damage in the June 23 flood, but don't realize they qualify for an SBA disaster loan, because their house was not actually involved in the flood."

If a basement was flooded from the rain or from water in the ground, or if the house or driveway was damaged, it probably would be covered by a disaster loan, regardless of how far the house is located from the flooding river.

"A rule of thumb," McKean said, "is that damage which did not exist before the flood can be covered by a disaster loan. These Small Business Administration loans carry a forgiveness feature on the first $5,000 — which means it doesn't have to be paid back — and the remainder carries an interest rate of only 1 per cent."

Apparently many people have been told by well-meaning friends that if they weren't actually flooded, they can't qualify for an SBA loan. McKean urged anyone who has any questions to contact the SBA directly at its Corning or Elmira offices.

He pointed out Oct. 31 is the deadline for filing disaster loan applications.
