In a move to open the doors of higher education to a new segment of the community, St. John Fisher College has taken on five students over sixty, most of them retired.

The new students' response has been enthusiastic.

It gets monotonous talking to these new students, in fact, because their reactions to the courses they are taking are so predictable — they range all the way from "great!" to "wonderful!"

Any course offered by Fisher College is open under the program for a fee of $25, and admission is expedited by not requiring formal proof of previous academic achievements.

Katherine Kinsky, who says she hasn't been to school "in 40 years," is taking "Literature in Translation" from Dr. Florence Weinberg.

Carrying around a copy of Stendahl's "The Red and The Black" is a different experience for Miss Kinsky, a retired superintendent in personnel and payroll at Dupont. She thinks "work was easier than this," but she is "going to go on," even if it doesn't mean working for a degree.

Her previous education included graduation from Monroe High School and "some accounting and psychology courses," says Miss Kinsky. "Something like this makes you realize how much you don't know." She enjoys reading authors like Stendahl, whom she considers "a very subtle writer."

Everett Niblack chose "Psychology of Personality" with the idea of "upgrading my effectiveness." With his son, Niblack runs a grocery and food specialty business which he has had since 1932.

"All my life I have been interested in psychology," he says, "and all my life I have been in business. Now I can pick up some education." He is thinking that "I could make this a profession."

"I have always envied people fluent in more than one language," says Eugene Conant in giving his reasons for auditing an Advanced French course taught by Father William Marceau. Conant retired last July from the city school district of Rochester as assistant superintendent for administration.

Conant holds a parttime position with a travel agency, and plans to lead a tour to Paris this summer.
