

Wayne County

'We don't have two dollars to spare.'

A man of good humor and pungently expressed opinions, Noble thinks the credit union's major function is to teach people the cost of money. "When they realize how much the dollar-down, dollar-a-week deal costs them, they become financially more responsible."

He sees a broader involvement in the credit union starting in the last year. It's a change he welcomes. "The more they can do, the less work I have to do."

The credit union receives its third and possibly its last grant this year. "If they need the money for other things," said Noble, "that's where it should go, I told them."

Terry Walsh and Kim Georgianna get help in the art of walking on cans from Lynn Samuel at Sodus Day Care Center.

LaVerne Noble goes over a credit application in his "office" in a former class room used by the Clyde Federal Credit Union.

Rev. Simmons looks at two of the new houses that CASH built.