

ALL IN THE FAMILY Sarah Child

Twenty years ago when I was first learning how to type there were according to our teacher two theories on how one could best attain both a high degree of speed and accuracy.

The first theory was to teach the student to go slowly and very accurately. The accuracy at the outset would insure good typing habits forever and eventually the more practice the greater the speed would become.

The second theory subscribed to by our teacher was to try for speed and not worry about the typographical errors.

Eventually, so the theory went, as one gained practice the accuracy would come naturally and in the meantime the typing novice would be building great speed.

Sure enough it worked. One week we would be hitting two out of five keys incorrectly and the next week we would have improved so that only one out of ten or twenty characters would be wrong. And all the time we were gaining not only great speed but confidence as well.

Enthusiasm never flagged for, in the early stages at least, we were not made to stop and correct but were told simply to go on and "do better with the next exercise."

It was some time before I realized that those two theories can be applied to most learning processes.

I thought of it the other day as a friend was attempting to give me a sewing lesson. I explained that I had tried sewing 10 years ago and had given up the group lesson when the teacher had made us take eight weeks to finish a dress. Not only was my initial zest for learning doused but by the time the dress was finished I was so thoroughly sick of it I didn't want to look at it much less wear it.

The friend, a fastidious seamstress of the "rip out and start over" persuasion, looked aghast.

I am sure that a person's makeup must have a great deal to do with which learning principle best suits him or her.

As I grow older I become only a little less impatient. I do not now always have to read a book in one sitting to find how it comes out, do a wallpaper job in one day to see the complete transformation of the room or put the bread in the oven before it has sufficient time to raise.

But there is little use kidding myself that my natural predilection is to slam-bang my way through an experience, then repeat the process until some finesse emerges.

Rector Named to St. Anthony's

Father Richard J. Masciangelo, CPPS, rector of the Precious Blood House of Studies here, has been named associate pastor of St. Anthony of Padua Church on Lorimer Street, the Pastoral Office announced this week.

The appointment fills a vacancy resulting from the assignment of Father Leo Mans to the pastorate of St. Ignatius, Hornell.

Father Masciangelo, although living at St. Anthony's, will continue as spiritual adviser to the seminarians housed at 65 Highland Ave. On Sept. 1, the order will provide him with an administrator, Brother Anthony Canterucci, of St. Alphonsus parish, Toronto.

Father Masciangelo, from Niles, Ohio, was graduated from St. Bernard's Seminary and ordained in 1969. He did parish work at St. Roch's, Toronto, for two years and was named rector of the Precious Blood house in August, 1971.

OUR PARISH COUNCIL Bernard Lyons

Like the law that "work expands to fit the time allotted for it," there's an economic law that seems to say that "outgo always spills over the edges of your income."

Your parish council has probably discussed fund-raising at one time or another.

Here are some tips on getting started in fund-raising.

Before you start, take another look at your reason for wanting to raise funds, and see whether better accounting and budget procedures might solve your problem.

If you are certain of your parish financing and you have tapped all the resources available to you among the members of your worshipping community, you are prepared to sell your program to the neighborhoods and assure

Strong Law On Obscenity Is Advocated

Albany, [RNS] — Following the Supreme Court decisions on pornography, New York should now pass a strong state law against obscenity, according to the secretary of the New York State Catholic Committee.

"The court indicated it was not its function to propose laws," said Charles J. Tobin, Jr., "but merely outline the limit to which the laws may go."

"Therefore," he said, "the decisions' effect will be felt only if state and local legislatures prepare and pass local laws defining obscenity according to the guidelines set up by the court."

Tobin said that meant the New York legislature should pass a bill similar to the Pisani-Flack legislation introduced in this year's session, now concluded, and held over until next year's session.

them that the money will be effectively used.

Successful fund-raising campaigns and events are usually repeated year after year, and if conducted properly, will grow.

If you collect funds for a day-care center every fall, or stage a rummage sale every spring, the awareness of your campaign or event and the receptivity to it will increase from the consistent exposure.

There isn't any one best time to ask for money or to get people to take part in a fund-raising event, but there are certain times, that should not be used in your schedule.

Financial solicitations should not be made when the income tax deadline is worrying people, nor should a fund-raising party be held near the Christmas season when it would have to compete with hundreds of other events.

You can not expect to be very successful at fund-raising if the only time people in the community hear from you is when you want money, or the only time they see you is when you come around selling boxes or candy.

Fund-raising campaigns and events have to be tied to a particular time period to be effective, but your communication with the public, from whom you are asking support, should be a continuous affair.

The Red Cross, for example, has a fund-raising campaign, but they tell you all year long what they are doing, and how your contributions benefit their clients.

Your parish council must do the same.

The more effectively you take part in the community, and the more consistently you communicate with the people around you, the more responsive other people will be to your needs and goals.
