

And Don't Forget:

Rehearsal: Information as to the date and exact time of the wedding rehearsal should be passed on to all the members of the wedding party. They should be encouraged to be on the scene promptly. Make sure the wedding party observes proper decorum in church during the rehearsal.

Publication of banns: The announcement of your intention to marry should be made in both parishes of the bride and groom, usually on the three Sundays before the wedding. If these arrangements sound complicated, remember the priest has been through them scores of times and will show you the steps that have to be taken.

Marriage ceremony booklet: One of the best ways to help your guests participate in your wedding Mass is to provide them each with a booklet explaining the ceremony and containing the chief prayers, readings, and songs. Such booklets can be secured already printed, or if you're working up your own ceremony, it is relatively easy to turn out something quite presentable.

Invitations: For years all wedding invitations looked and sounded exactly alike with only minor variations in engraving and paper texture. Today even many Changing Your Name?

Banks, for instance, won't be very happy if you sign your new name on checks before registering your new signature with them.

Others that must be informed of your name change are:

formal invitations are worded to reflect the religious dimension of the ceremony. Some like traditional design, while others like to emphasize creativity with the use of liturgical symbols and emphasis on the tone of celebration. Some couples and parents compose their own wording to add personal warmth. So choose or create a wedding invitation that says what you want it to say — always remembering the dignity and joy of the occasion.

*Your local Social Security office.

*The state motor vehicle agency, so it can change your driver's license and auto registration.

*Insurance companies, and this may be a pleasant surprise. Auto insurance rates often will decrease once you are married.
