

Truck Campers are More Than Just Vacation Shelter

Truck campers are the third most popular form of recreational vehicle, outnumbered only by travel trailers and pop-up camping trailers.

Most truck campers, like the 11-foot Monitor shown here, slide onto the bed of a pickup truck and can be removed easily with the jacks that are provided. This means that when you're not using the camper, you have a second car (truck), and the kids have an ideal camp-out facility in the backyard or an extra bedroom for your mother-in-law.

Helpful Hints

If you're in the market for a truck camper, here are some helpful hints to look for in selecting one.

Chances are you're looking for more than just shelter. That's why top manufacturers offer their units complete with features like a three-burner stove with oven, a large icebox or optional gas/electric refrigerator, thermostatically controlled furnace, complete water system, plus all the standard conveniences like a toilet and shower.

And all these features are engineered into a relatively small unit that still sleeps as many as six people comfortably.

According to R. J. Woods, general manager of Wickes Recreational Vehicles, which markets Monitor RVs, "The days when Pop simply wanted a place to crawl in and out of the rain are gone. Truck camper buyers have become highly sophisticated, and they're demanding as much comfort and convenience as we build into our 30-foot travel trailers. Our truck campers are designed to give them just that."

Optional Equipment

And while we're talking about extras, take a look at some of the optional equipment that's available: roof rack and ladder, extra bunks, carpeting—even an intercom. That's luxury!

If you're starting to think that you can get just about anything you want in a truck camper, you're right. The important thing is to know what you want before you buy. One thing to look for is a good, livable floor plan with a low center of gravity.

Don't buy a particular unit simply because it "seems" nicer than the others you've looked at. Think about how you plan to use the truck camper. How will it handle on the truck? How many people will you usually have along? What kinds of activities will you be involved in? How often will you use it? Short trips or long? Once you've answered some of these basic questions, you're ready to start shopping.
