

Some Hints on How to Use 'Cabin Fever' Time to Keep Tackle in Best Condition

REELS—strip off old line. Disassemble reel. Use a pan for a bathtub and pour in a cup of kerosene. Using a small paintbrush or toothbrush (one you don't plan on using again) rinse and scrub all visible gunk and lubricant from reel. Dry with a cloth or spray with a small can of compressed air. Apply a light coating of reel grease to the gears. Use oil other places where metal runs against metal. Reassemble and put on new line.

RODS—check guides with magnifying glass. If any grooves or chips are located, take the guide off and replace (preferably with aluminum oxide guides). Check wraps and revarnish with any good rod varnish or flow-coat epoxy topping. Check ferrules and tip top. If loose at all, heat, remove and reseat with ferrule cement or epoxy. Do not use epoxy on tip top. Scrub handle with Brillo pad and water, rinse off and dry. It'll look like new.

"Cabin Fever Time" to a fisherman is anytime—for one reason or another—that he's confined to the confinements of somewhere other than a lake or stream doing what he wants to do—fish.

Fourth largest and growing fast.

Genny's popularity is growing—growing by leaps and bounds. It's because everyone who tries that refreshing, cold-aged taste loves it. That's why our brewery now is the fourth largest single-plant operation in the nation. (Number three, watch out!) And to bring you better beer we'll make our brewery even bigger and better.
