

Many sink styles, sizes give homeowner choice

The average homeowner is surprised today at the choice of sinks available for his new kitchen. In many colors, and sizes, some even have three bowls — and they are not all made of the same basic material. The popular porcelain enamel-on-steel sink is still available, but so is the durable porcelain enamel-on-cast iron model. The latter are stain resistant. Also available are the newly popular stainless steel sinks. Consumers are attracted by its beauty in spite of its tendency to show finger prints. At one time the subject of number of bowls in a sink was academic. Before dishwashers, practically everyone wanted two bowls, medium to large and of equal size. The advent of the dishwasher slowed the demand for the two-bowl sink, and explains why the average sink sold today is a 24-by-21-inch single bowl model. However, some manufacturers note a definite trend towards a sink with one unusually large, unusually deep bowl, and one small, shallow bowl. The larger bowl is used for larger pots and oven racks which don't fit in a dishwasher.
