

Country look inspires autumn menswear

Men's fashions for fall will be more relaxed, more comfortable, and heavily endowed with the elegance of the country gentleman.

The "Country Squire Look" is the all-around suit, says the Men's Fashion Association. It's tailored with a British accent in tweeds, Glen plaids, gun club checks, as well as gabardine and cavalry twills.

Stripes and linear looks in flannels and worsteds will appeal to the more urban-minded man. But whether the look is town or country, vests will be an important part of it. They're made to match, to contrast, or even to reverse.

There's a big trend to trios: suits with an extra pair of slacks in a coordinating color to give sport coat versatility to the suit jacket.

Number one choice in sportswear continues to be the "easy" or "casual" suit, in battle jacket, blouson, C.P.O., over-shirt and safari-style variations.

Keep an eye on sport coats—they're boldly patterned in greens and camels—although the ever-popular blazer retains its classic appeal. Jeans are still the most important casual slacks in a wide choice of fabrics and models.

Outerwear can be summed up in one word: variety! There's the updated reefer with peaked lapels and flap pockets, the classic navy pea coat with oversized collar, the raglan-sleeved "steamer coat" in rugged tweed or camel hair, and the wrapped and sash-belted polo coat.

It's a big sweater year—the bigger the better. The big shawl collar, on pull-overs, cardigans and wraps, is the look for fall. Neater patterns show up on sleeveless sweaters, often worn with tweed suits and sport jackets.

In dress shirts, narrow stripes and small, neat checks go well with tweedy clothing. Dressier looks include woven satin stripes and subtle tone-on-tone patterns. Those who like the European-type suit can find shirts cut closer to the body, often with a higher armhole.

Sport shirts stress the western motif with fancy yokes, pockets and cuffs. Pattern, from neat over-all geometrics to the wildest poster prints, abounds in both wovens and knits.

In formalwear, the classic black dinner jacket is being worn with tartan vests and trousers. More offbeat models, longer in back and sharply cut away in front, come in velvets and brocades. Navy blues, deep reds, dark grays, browns and greens are the new color trends.
