

Four Offices Suggest Food Crisis Projects

In a recent letter, Bishop Joseph L. Hogan requested that parishes, Councils, and regions within the diocese respond to the U.S. Bishops' food plan with written action proposals submitted to him by April 1. Groups or individuals approaching the study of world hunger for the first time will find resources available within the diocese.

At the Office of Human Development, Father Daniel Tormey and Sister Mary Ann Weiland have produced a slide/tape show on hunger and compiled printed materials discussing all aspects of the problem and Christian responses. They offer to help groups plan events dealing with world hunger. Tim McCluskey, Sister Mary Lou Andrychuk, and Carolyn Micklem are also available as special speakers through OHD. Ms. Micklem speaks especially on alternate diets and life-styles.

A bibliography of current articles and pamphlets, suggested simulation activities, lesson plans on world hunger, and group projects have been prepared for school use at the Department of Education. Sister Roberta Tierney of the Department of Education suggests that these materials could be adapted by other groups as well.

Campus Ministry advises groups to seek out community people, economists, political scientists, sociologists to form seminars to discuss the complexity of the problem. They also suggest that groups create slides, films, or multimedia presentations to be used in discussion groups, and prayer services or liturgies.

Liturgy is one of the most effective means of keeping the issue of world hunger before the Church, according to Sister Mary Ann. Sister Margaret Mary Mattle reports that the Liturgy Department has worked with OHD to prepare a few sample liturgies, prayers and services.

OHD has also prepared a personal pledge form to effect lifestyle changes. The list suggests decreasing the amount of meat consumed in order to create a grain surplus, not wasting food, not serving cookies and snacks at meetings, using fertilizers to grow food only, and using less fuel for all purposes.

Sister Mary Ann recommends that individual financial contributions be given locally, and that pressure be brought to bear on the government to effect the major donations to hungry countries that are needed. Writing to the President, Secretaries of State and Agriculture, the House and Senate Foreign Relations Committees and individual members of Congress is a suggested pressure tactic. Visits to local representatives are also urged. OHD provides necessary information for groups or individuals interested in political involvement.

Lobby groups such as Network, Common Cause, or Bread for the World are another channel for political action recommended by the Office of Human Development.
