'Bread for the World' Is Sisters Council Topic

By MOLLY JUDGE

The Diocesan Sisters' Council has declared its support of Bread for the World, a political action group, and of the continuation of the St. Mary's Hospital obstetrical unit.

Bread for the World mainly directs its efforts toward changing legislation to help ease world hunger. The DSC urged every religious house in the diocese to back the organization, after they had reviewed data and statistics on the food situation supplied by the Office of Human Development.

Sister Clarice Correla, of the Daughters of Charity brought the DSC up to date on the hospital controversy in the Rochester area. Currently, the Genesee Region Health Planning Council has directed the Monroe County Health Council's Hospital Committee to recommend which of the five Rochester hospital's OB facilities should be consolidated with another unit. The DSC voted to write a letter as a diocesan body to the Genesee Health Council urging the continuation of St. Mary's OB facility. The action was taken at the monthly meeting, last Saturday at Mercy Mother house.

Support was also given to the development of a Narcotics Guidance Council in the Rochester area. David Moviniah, head of NGC, explained in an informational report that the council would establish neighborhood treatment centers where individuals with drug problems could seek immediate help.

The 1975-76 budget of the DSC was approved and will be sent to John Ritzenthaler, diocesan treasurer, for final approval. The budget calls for a $25,000 allotment which includes all expenses entailed by the DSC.

Sister Anne Mary Dooley, SSJ, supplied the DSC with information concerning a conference being planned by Women in Future Priesthood Now; A Call for Action, an organization dedicated to the ordination of women in the Roman Catholic Church. The conference is tentatively scheduled for next Thanksgiving week-end and will deal with the gradual installation of women as priests. According to Sister Anne Mary, the ordination of women is a question of justice. It is not a theological problem she said, but a sociological one, because women are not specifically prohibited from becoming priests.

The Executive Committee approved a $34,000 sum requested by Bishop Joseph L. Hogan as the Diocesan Bicentennial budget. The sisters felt that the money could be raised through parishioner contributions in gratitude for the freedom of religion offered in this country.

Parish Agency Announced By Education Department

A representative group of principals, religious education coordinators and lay educational leadership have been working since November on creating an agency which will deliver a broad comprehensive program of Christian educational services to subscribing parishes.

The plan for this "Northeast Christian Education Institute" was the inspiration of a group of Christian educators in the Northeast, working with Dr. Padraic O'Hare, the diocesan educational planning consultant.

Dr. O'Hare explains: "The idea behind the institute is simplicity itself. We know that even parishes with professional general and religious educators on their pastoral staff cannot create and sustain the kind of high quality broad-scale teacher-training and adult education programs that are going to be extensive enough to give solid foundation to the adult learner or numerous enough to fulfill the many educational needs of the adult community. But when the efforts of the professional in 20 or 30 parishes are joined and given some structure of permanence then we are unloosing an enormous energy."

The institute program includes courses and in service in basic theology and methodology for catechists, minicourses on sacraments, special Education Program, fundamentals of Catholic belief, courses to update adult Christians, courses specially designed for Catholic school faculties, advanced courses for experienced catechists and three special programs on spirituality, lenten and advent programs and a full-day workshop on using artistic media in Religious Education. More than 30 courses will be offered.

"Like so many hopes, the institute depends for its success on financial support," explains Sister Ellen Galvin, Religious Education director of Holy Spirit in Penfield. "If a sufficient number of parishes buy into the institute, then the cost to each should be relatively small. But we won't know whether our work is successful until a pre-registration process tells us how many participants we will have and how much income we will receive."

Income will be used to hire a full-time coordinator for the institute and purchase materials and supplies.

The institute program will be offered especially to approximately 30 parishes on the Northeast, North and Southeast regions and Wayne County, but will be open to all. While not strictly a regional effort, the inspiration has come from the Northeast, and the planning has been encouraged by the Regional Coordinator Father Thomas Burr and assistant coordinator, Conrad Scheg. Those interested in more information can call Dr. O'Hare at the Pastoral Center (328-3210).

World Hunger to Be Topic

Auxiliary Bishop Thomas J. Gumbleton, of Detroit, will give the fifth Beaven Lecture at the University of Rochester, Interfaith Chapel on Friday, April 4, at 8 p.m. Bishop Gumbleton will speak on "A Moral Response to the World Hunger Crisis."

Bishop Gumbleton was recently re-elected vice president of Bread for the World, a citizen's group which seeks to link the ethical message of the Judeo-Christian traditions with the problem of hunger in attempting to change national policies. Bread for the World is one of the few Washington lobbies attempting to work with Congress and the administration to increase U.S. emergency food relief to those countries classified by the United Nations as "most seriously affected" by food shortages.
