

Pool

hedge, fence or even canvas backdrop will permit additional weeks of swimming in the cooler spring and autumn weeks. A wind break also cuts down on the amount of debris blown into the pool — and thus cuts down on the cleaning chores.

If you decide to locate the pool near large trees, you must be prepared to spend extra time removing fallen leaves from the water. If you have a large yard with mature trees, it may be best to consult the pool builder or a landscaper architect about saving your trees and still positioning the pool correctly.

An experienced pool builder will discuss with you such factors as relocation of water pipes and utility lines, should this be necessary. Other possible considerations are whether underground water or hard rock will increase excavating costs, whether savings can be effected by using excavated dirt to grade another part of your property and where the pool will blend best with your home and landscaping.

When you have decided upon the size, location and equipment to go with your pool, your contract for construction should specify exactly what materials are to be used and every item of expense of materials and labor, including optional equipment.
