

Take your bikes along on outdoor vacation

Don't leave your bicycles at home in the garage when you head out for your vacation; take them along. Your bicycle can be used to take side trips from your main route or to provide transportation and exercise when you reach your destination, helping you to save fuel needed for your motor vehicle.

If you are traveling by car, you can fit a bicycle rack to either the bumper or roof with very little effort. There are racks to fit cars from the subcompacts up to motorhomes. Most bumper racks hold two bikes, and roof racks will take up to four.

What happens if you plan to travel by bus, train or airplane? You can still take your bike along in most cases, but it is advisable to check locally before showing up at the depot or airport. All major airlines accept a ticket-buyer's bicycle. Some will supply a large packing box for the bike. Most require that you turn the handlebars sideways and remove the pedals.

Amtrak will accept bicycles as personal luggage, as is. No disassembly is needed, but it is wise to remove pump, water bottle or bags for security reasons. The catch is to be sure that the train you plan to take has a baggage car.

The two major bus companies will accept bicycles as personal luggage but they must be partially disassembled and cartoned or bagged in containers no more than 60 inches long. More often than not you must supply your own carton. Your Mossberg dealer can help you out here because he usually has a bicycle shipping carton around he will probably give you free.
