

Efficient camp kitchen equipment

Since convenience in the "camp kitchen" means more time to enjoy the Great Outdoors, most experienced campers realize that having a neat, well organized mess area means a lot at mealtime. Some pre-planning may make things easier for the chief cook and help to satisfy those hearty outdoor appetites that seem to be a "camp standard."

A good campstove, a well insulated and roomy cooler and a large tub or basin for washing dishes make a good basis for any "camp kitchen." Each camper should have his own set of dishes: plastic or aluminum plates, cups and cutlery which can be labeled with each camper's name.

A five gallon bucket is useful for hauling water at clean-up time. It can be packed with supplies while traveling en route to and from the camp spot to save space. Dishwashing supplies normally include: two dishpans, liquid soap, scouring pads, dishcloth, cleanser, dish drainer and plastic storage bags.

The easiest way to estimate how much food to take along is by planning menus for each meal and breaking them down into basic ingredients for your shopping list.

Convenience also means using safe, easy-to-operate camping appliances.

Camping equipment fueled with propane is just that: convenient. Propane is recognized as being one of the cleanest, safest liquid fuels.
