

THE LEGACY OF THE MISSIONARY

As for the missionaries who have packed their bags and moved on, they seek now to build a stronger sense of communion in the universal church and to stimulate the churches in developed countries to become more prophetic themselves in challenging some of the institutions of their own countries whose policies have crucial moral consequences all over the developing world. It is not enough for the local churches to be alive and well at the grass roots in Asia, Africa or Latin America if the churches in the First World are not sensitive to the gospel implications of living as Christians amid great wealth that is not being equally shared with their brothers and sisters in other parts of the world.

Rev. Daniel P. Tormey, now assistant to the director of the Office of Human Development in the Diocese of Rochester, N.Y., served in the parish of San Jose Obrero, LaPaz, Bolivia, from 1972 to 1974.
