ALL IN THE FAMILY

Sarah Child

Poor Sarah's Almanac:

* When it comes to kids, two's company, three's a circus.

* Diet mathematics: It takes one meal out to put on two pounds, three days to take them off and three and a half days to break the stern resolve you made after the first slip.

* A friend is someone who'll listen to you complain for a half an hour and then tell you how good it was to get together.

* The stainless that I got for my Betty Crocker coupons finally arrived and along with it a letter telling me that I owed them more money because the coupon catalogue I ordered from is outdated. I plan to write back and tell them the stainless they sent is outdated, too. (Paul Revere pattern) and let's call it even.

* Having one's husband home for a week vacation without going anywhere must be a little what it's like in retirement. I made the coffee, he got the kids' breakfast, I started a load of wash, he cleared the table. But enough was enough. He went out shopping for fertilizer. I went to sewing class.

* On the first real hot day the lilac began to bloom, the bumble bees began circling the back porch. Mr. Pheasant brought his lady friends out for an evening walk and the laundry increased ten-fold.

* A child who can open a refrigerator without being heard will probably grow up to be a safecracker or a 250-pound weight watcher.

* Our youngest has invented a new form of Chinese torture. She drips pineapple juice on the yellow kitchen floor before bed. The next morning when I'm making coffee with one eye at half mast, the other completely closed, I find I'm stuck wherever I happen to stop until somebody else gets up and pries me loose.

* Rising at 6:15 on a perfectly beautiful Sunday morning and sitting quietly watching the squirrels jump from tree to tree, seeing the red cardinal land in the greenest patch of grass and finally planting blue and white flowering clematis vines before going off to Mass seems the perfect way to start a Sabbath. It also tends to make an individual feel very smug.

MEMORIAL DAY

A special Memorial Day Mass was celebrated Monday morning at Holy Rosary, with Msgr. Leslie Whalen of Our Lady of Lourdes as homilist. The parish worship committee planned the liturgy in homage to deceased servicemen.
