and a goodly crowd did just that at Courier-Journal Catholic Family Night at Silver Stadium. Their rooting helped as the Rochester Red Wings defeated the Richmond Braves, 6-5, in 10 innings.

Leading the contingent of diocesans at the special night was Bishop Joseph L. Hogan who threw out the first ball, was interviewed by announcer Pete Brown over WROC-Radio, stayed through the entire extra-inning game and all in all found the night at the ballpark relaxing. Brown, for one, professed surprise at the depth of the Bishop's knowledge of baseball.

Royle Stillman, since called up by the Baltimore Orioles, got things off on the right foot for the home fans when he lined a first-inning home run over the rightfield fence. The game was a bit imperfect (five errors) but exciting — the Wings came within inches of pulling off an around-the-horn triple play.

No night at the ball park would be complete without a treat for the children — popcorn, snocones, hot dogs, or pop — and Catholic Family Night was no different. The biggest treat of all, however, was provided by the Red Wings when they won the game on a Stillman single in the 10th inning. After all, if they didn't win, it would be a shame.

Radio stint — Bishop Hogan went on the air with Red Wing announcer Pete Brown who was surprised at the Bishop's knowledge of the game. An almost-triple play prompted Bishop Hogan's description of the last one performed here.
