

Time to Get Ready For Clothing Drive

Thanksgiving Day seems far distant at summer's end, but summer's end is precisely the time to get ready for that traditional holiday feature, the Bishops' Clothing Drive.

As seasons and wardrobes change, Father William Flynn points out that cast-off summer apparel is just what's needed by the world's neediest people.

Father Flynn, the chancellor, is diocesan chairman once again of the drive scheduled for Thanksgiving week. Catholic Relief Services handles the collection and distribution of the clothing, under the aegis of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops.

A letter from the conference president, Archbishop Joseph Bernardin of Cincinnati, stresses the need for light-weight clothing for people of the underdeveloped countries, "concentrated as they are in the warmer areas of the globe."

Blankets also are needed throughout the world, according to Bishop Edward E. Swanson, executive director of CRS. And there is a need for remnants of yard goods for people unaccustomed to Western-style clothing.

These are things to keep in mind during the great fall house cleaning.
