George Beahon

People who promote sports banquets are learning that the High Cost of Living has not bypassed the area of recruiting athletic livestock for the eating and/oratorical circuit.

Boston Red Sox super-rookie Fred Lynn was and is a prime candidate to win the Gannett-Press Radio Club Athlete of The Year Award. Win or lose, he won't be at the dais at the Holiday Inn, but this no longer is a rarity in awards dinners. He also won't be in Buffalo the previous night for the Dunlop bash.

O.J. Simpson couldn't make it and neither could Henry Aaron the last two years — the Rochester dinner, and others, do not collapse just because one super-stud is not at the head table — Rochester actually has its best lineup in several years. Bernie Carbo and Floyd Patterson and Jack Twyman and Marty Liguori and Satchel Paige and Ken Stabler and Joe DeLamielleure all add up to a high class program.

Add in two extraordinary guys who specialize in humor — Bob Uecker and Frank Laydon — and the show next Tuesday night should be one of the best.

The high price of talent? Fred Lynn, it should be noted, announced last October that he planned to stay in Southern California all through the off-season. He suspected it would be quite a challenge to match his production as a freshman with the Red Sox, and did not intend to waste himself on the banquet circuit.

Would Lynn accept $3,000 to attend the Buffalo and Rochester dinners, back to back nights?

Take the word of his agent, Fred Lynn, would not make the trip — even for $10,000.

There have been many hassels over surprise selections all around the sports map for year-end awards. Personally I would vote for Muhammad Ali, Fred Lynn, and Chris Evert, in that order, and if realize that would not begin to win any popularity contest.

Sports Illustrated recently named Pete Rose its Sportsman of The Year. And noted that of the hundreds of suggestions in the mail nobody voted for Joao Oliveira or Nadia Comaneci. Whom?

It seems a poll of sports editors of European papers named Joao and Nadia the male and female athletes of 1975. SI neglected to explain what they did. So just in case you wondered, Joao was triple-jump champion and Nadia, a gymnast. I hope that helps make your day.
