The Jacobs Brothers are doling up Boston Garden, their new property, and when they spend money they like to see what they get for it.

The Jacobs Brothers are not the types likely to commit $10 million for a hockey player with no cartilage remaining in one knee and some scarred material in the other.

Otherwise Orr is in relatively good health. He is generally accepted as the greatest player in the game. He managed that recognition because of many skills on top of fantastic skating.

Considering the financial condition of the World Hockey Association, I doubt that Minnesota will come up with a big pre-paid contract for free agent Orr next summer.

Considering the financial condition of the Jacobs Brothers, I doubt they will come up either. But for a different reason. They didn't get what they got by paying $10 dollars for distressed merchandise.

Quote and Unquote: General Manager Jerry Colangelo of the Phoenix Suns of the NBA, after Pat Riley was traded from Los Angeles but refused to report without a rewritten contract: "We are not going to let the inmates run the asylum."

Veteran member of upstate New York basketball referees board: "There is one college coach in this area who consistently abuses officials and incites trouble. We are talking in terms of boycotting his schedule if he doesn't reform."

Columbia coach Tom Penders, before a game with Number 1 ranked Indiana: "Their weakness? Coach Bobby Knight's socks don't match his tie. That's it."

Stephen Graves, 77 years old, top-rated tennis player in the 75-and-older division: "A lot of good younger guys are coming up. Like that Clarence Chaffee, who just turned 75."

By the time you get around to this Bobby Orr may be blasting away at National Hockey League goaltenders once more. The plan was for the injured Boston Bruin superstar to team up with former Ranger Brad Park on a power-play combination that should inspire goalies to run up white flags.

Orr has been out of NHL rinks and out of the news since late last November, when he took his left knee to surgery for the fifth time. He is way out in front of Broadway Joe Namath in this department, and at 27 Orr has five years in hand on Namath.

Namath definitely is on the trading block, perhaps mostly because he wants to head out to Los Angeles. Not because he can improve on his $450,000 salary for 1976.

Orr is eligible to move next season, and he is listening to some heavy talk from the Minnesota Fighting Saints of the World Hockey Association. (It is presumed that Orr's name on a long term contract would be super enough collateral in Minnesota to guarantee his paychecks.)

At any rate Orr is threatening to leave Boston, unless he gets a 10-year "pre-paid" contract. His agent-attorney is Alan Eagleson. The people holding Orr's contract are called Sportsystems, Inc., which means the Jacobs Brothers, who are most famous here for owning Finger Lakes.

Orr and Eagleson want $10 million, or something like a mere $700 a day for the next ten years.

Standards Come First at St. Ann's

By STELLA DeGAETANO

Hornell— St. Ann's School will continue to maintain its standards of education in the face of increasing requests for enrollment.

Sister Ambrose, principal of St. Ann's, stated that "it is impossible to accommodate all the children who might want to enter the school in the fall. We cannot overcrowd grades."

Presently at St. Ann's there is one class in each grade, kindergarten through eight. No more than 35 or 36 students would be allowed in one class and there will not be two sections of any grade. "We will take only the students our facility can handle," Sister Ambrose said.

Currently there are 255 students enrolled at the school and Sister Ambrose said that some openings would occur in the fall. Some grades, however, are now completely filled.

In early March, registration for openings will be held. Sister Ambrose said vacancies in the grades will be posted and registration will be on a first come, first served basis.

The school is not maintaining a waiting list now, but it will once registration opens.

The only grade that might add an additional class is kindergarten, where one half-day class now exists. There is a possibility that another half-day class could be started.

The curriculum at St. Ann's follows the state education department requirements, plus religion. "We're the only Catholic school in the area," Sister Ambrose said. "Therefore our teaching is religion oriented. A religious background is a regular part of the program, but that doesn't mean our textbooks are only written by Catholics."

The teaching staff is composed of four sisters and seven lay teachers. Grades six, seven and eight form a junior high school and teaching is done on a departmental basis. Because of limited facilities, physical education classes are held at the YMCA. There is no cafeteria at the school and children must bring a lunch.

Although the school is for Catholic education, children do not have to be Catholic to be admitted. There is no tuition charged to church members, but non-members pay a certain fee. Children from other Catholic parishes are also educated with an agreement between the parishes covering tuition.
