McConneck Quelfies Asistert For Federal Funds

McCormack, the anti-abortion candidate for President, has raised the required $5,000 minimum in each of 20 states and has applied for matching federal campaigns filinds

Mrs. McCormack, a Long Island housewife, is running for the Democratic nomination on a prolife, anti-abortion platform. Her campaign is supported by the Pro-Life Action Committee, which seeks to repeal laws allowing abortion.

If Federal Election Commission auditors find no discrepancies in the ledgers of the Pro-Life Action Committee, Mrs McCormack, Roman Catholic, may be certified for more than $100,000 in matching funds.

Mrs. McCormack's campaign has aroused strong opposition. She has been labeled a one-issue candidate" who is campaigning simply to publicize the anti-abortion position. She has been charged with perverting the new federal campaign financing law, and devising a diever scheme to promote the anti-abortion view. The Catholic Church has also been accused of giving Mrs. McCormack financial support.

All of the these charges are vigorously denied by Mrs. Mc-Cormack, 49 a mother of four and wife of FrancislJohn McCormack, a strange (if indeed they even heard Him) to pray for them as they ridiculed and mocked and crucified Him, for His was the first God to insist not on violence but on prayer for enemies. The soldiers jeers were audible over the confused silence of the mob which had only moments before screamed for His death ... their brief moment of triumph contrasting with the horror weighing the little group of devoteds exhausted at the foot of His final tree. But His prayer bore immediate if bitter fruit as the soldiers and the mob realized too late truly He was the Son of God.

The Winter Olympics continue to dominate the tube in a most entertaining fashion.

Turning to Channel 13 and ABC at 9 p.m. and weekends has become habit forming and rewarding The only event which inspires little interest at our house s hockey as played by the Russians, their professional tour prior to the Olympics lifting them out of the realm of the amateur factually if not technically.

All the other sports, however, trom luge to dance skate pairs has engrossed and at times enthralled

If there is a more dangerous and thrilling sport than men's downhill skiing as demonstrated at Inn-sbruck I have not seen it. To rush pell mell over curves of ice at speeds ranging up to 70 miles per hour seems not so much sporting as suicidal. And indeed before the competition announcers and cameras took us over the run to show where various skiers had lost

The pairs skating, a great deal . less dangerous and infinitely more beautiful, captivated everybody and the Americans. That Babilonia and Randy Gardner, while notwinning a medal demonstrated a symmetry and grace that leaves an. impression akin to that one might.

Producers of sporting events in this country who promise to grab an even greater share of prime time with each successive season might take a chapter from the Olympics staff when it comes to building interest in the athletes.

The brief vignettes which in-cluded interviews with the players and showed a little of the way they train year around and some of their private lives generated far greater interest in the young men and women than might otherwise been given them.

Among the capsule sketches I aw were those on downhill ski champion Franz Klammer, Russia's gold medalists in pairs skating, Irina Rodnina and Alexander Zaitsev, the U.S. three-medal speed skater Sheila Young and silver medalist women's down hill skier Cindy Nelson of Minnesota.

Why the ABC producers chose Pierre Salinger for the marshmallow bb of doing feature stories on the town and countryside is anybody's guess.

perfect job for some attractive, vivacious young woman rather than a politically battle scarred cigarhompin' yeteran of smoky back rooms.

Anchor-man Jim McKay in his "official" Olympic sweaters and hair piece tended to remind me more of Star Treck and its Spockish denizens than of a sportscaster but that's my problem as is his recurring image of the reporter in the old soaper "Day in Court."

On the whole, however, ABC has done itself proud with its coverage.

But nowhere does Christ teach. that we must ignore, encourage or follow the mob which attacks, ridicules and replaces Him. Prayer yes; but at the same time watchful lest we be tempted to join the mockers And we are wise to identify those who do attack. For as Christ's promises and glories are ours, so too are His frustrations and His enemies.

By their spoken and printed words the following people (many of them leaders in the social, literary, educational or scientific worlds) openly support Humanism, openly replace the Ten Com-mandments with Situation Ethics, and openly stress self-liberation, free sex and abortion, euthanasia, and a world commune. They may deserve respect for their intellectual achievements; they certainly deserve the right to teach as they please; but on questions of a moral order. Christians will be wise to identify and avoid following the Humanist thrusts. We can
