The girls watched each other compete to get a better idea of where they stood. Still, the judge's announcements brought screams of happiness, as well as tears of sorrow.

The competition was furious, yet feminine. The above block of photographs were taken during the actual competitions. The judges stressed general appeal, such as neatness and enthusiasm, as well as the appropriateness, height, variety, and difficulty of the jumps.

Some cried because they made it to the finals.

Some cried because they didn't.

Some just cried.
