

Ease of backyard cooking now possible in backwoods

A lot of people live patio-style: cooking, dining and entertaining around the old charcoal broiler. But something that's enjoyed in the backyard needn't be limited to that location thanks to portable propane gas grills.

It's yet another style of living, bringing backyard convenience to the backwoods or a boat. The new convenient carry-along charcoalers such as the Zebco "Tripper" bring their own supply of permanent lava rock briquettes along in a compact case and promise quick heat with the flick of a match.

These portable charcoalers come in handy for "let's-go-tonight" picnics when it's easier to hook up a cylinder of propane to cook hamburgers than it is to gather up the old grill and a bucket of charcoal.

In addition to quick

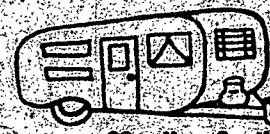

The kids just can't wait — so they preempt the picnic table in the park before mom and pop are prepared to start the meal. On the table, left, is the cooking unit and, right, the liquid gas fuelled Traveler light for use when dusk comes.

pick-up picnics, these portable grills like the Tripper fit in well to the longer outings since they burn the same convenient propane fuel that powers lights, stoves and heaters. In fact, for the weekend camper a complete Zebco propane system can be hooked up from one portable source to make camping easier.

So take a tip from those who do, bring backyard convenience to the backwoods with one of the new portable propane charcoalers.
