Pope Criticizes Extremists, Right and Left

Vatican City (RNS) — Twenty new cardinals from 14 countries received the insignia of their rank from Pope Paul May 24. Nineteen of them, including Archbishop William W. Baum of Washington, D.C., had been named April 27.

The 20th was the Archbishop of Hanoi, Joseph Marie Trinh-Nhu-Khue. His name had been kept secret while the Vatican was seeking assurances from communist Vietnam that no sanctions would be imposed on the prelate because of his elevation. The archbishop arrived in Rome only the day before the ceremonies.

At the secret part of the Consistory, Pope Paul asked the cardinals present to cast their final vote for canonization causes of three Beati (saints-to-be) including that of Father John Ogilvie, the 16th Century Scottish Jesuit martyr, whose canonization is expected to take place on Oct. 17.

Continuing his address, the pontiff said that he saw, on all the continents, many young people responding "generously" and concretely to the call of the Gospel and "showing an effort for absolute consistency between the heights of the Christian ideal and the duty of translating it into practice."

He then told the new cardinals of his displeasure over radicals of both right and left, emphasizing the activities of archconservatives who "systematically refuse to accept the teachings of Vatican II. He rarely mentions a name, except in praise, but he did name Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre, who preaches a return to the "purity" of the Counter Reformation.

In the public part of the Consistory, in the audience hall, the Pope bestowed the red skull-cap and the red four-cornered biretta on each of the cardinals.

The biretta, he reminded them, is a symbol "that you must show that you are fearless even to the shedding of your blood for the increase of the Christian faith, for the peace and tranquility of the People of God, and for the freedom and advancement of the Holy Roman Church."

Each cardinal in turn mounted a flight of marble steps to the Pope's throne. As the last one, Cardinal Trinh-Nhu-Khue approached, Pope Paul rose to his feet and embraced the Vietnamese, to the applause of the crowd.

In his address before the ceremony, the Pope remarked that "the modern world is rejected in the name of yesterday's."

name of yesterday's" and that this "is all the more serious in that the opposition is led by a prelate Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre, who nevertheless still has our respect." (The archbishop, a Frenchman, runs a seminary in Switzerland and has ordained about 10 priests who are working in Europe and North America.)

Pope Paul said that he found it painful to note Archbishop Lefebvre's attitude and that of his followers, "of placing themselves outside obedience and communion with the successor of Peter and therefore outside the Church."

This, said Paul, was the logical consequence when it was held preferable "to disobey with the pretext of preserving one's faith intact, and of working in one's own way for the preservation of the Catholic Church, while at the same time refusing to give her effective obedience. It is even said openly that the Second Vatican Council is not binding; that the faith would be in danger because of the reforms and post-Conciliar directives, and that one has the duty to disobey in order to preserve certain traditions."

Pope Paul said that the adoption of the modern world was not the

"Over 25 years ago," he noted, "the United States Congress declared the housing policy of this country to be 'a decent home in a suitable environment for every American family.' This goal has not been achieved."

Carr emphasized that housing is very properly a church issue, noting the "we must communicate to our people the conviction that indecent housing is a moral and religious issue, demanding a response from those who seek to follow Jesus."

"Realistically, we know the Church cannot play a major quantitative role as a provider of housing," Carr said. "We have neither the financial resources nor the personnel to build and maintain the required housing." He therefore emphasized the importance of those interested in housing to pressure "those private and public institutions where the major responsibility ought to lie."

Carr pointed out that the problem is getting worse rather than better, citing the "virtual abandonment of the federal role in housing." Currently, one out of every five families in the United States is suffering from housing deprivation, he said. Nearly 10 million families, he continued, live in housing that is either overcrowded or lacks basic plumbing facilities. He also noted that two-thirds of the recognized substandard housing is in rural areas and small towns, where there are few organizations to help.

"The most severely affected by this crisis," Carr said, "are the very poor; they are, however, not the only victims." He said that anyone who lives in an overcrowded or unsafe home, or pays too large a proportion of income for housing, is a victim of the housing crisis.

The situation is the result of years of a "lack of effective policy and action," Carr said, and he called for concerted action on every level to alleviate the housing crisis. He urged those interested to remind their representatives of the housing situation, and make sure that local people, both in the cities, towns, and neighborhoods, be kept aware of the situation. He noted that "national statements and legislative advocacy can be helpful, but they do not substitute for the essential hard work in dioceses and parishes."

Bishop Gives $2,500 to Aid Italy

Bishop Joseph L. Hogan has sent $2,500 to Catholic Relief Services in the name of the people of the Diocese of Rochester to support emergency aid efforts for the people of Northern Italy.

The region was struck by devastating earthquakes on May 6.

"In the wake of tragedies such as this," Bishop Hogan said, "there is an outpouring of concern. I am sending this donation knowing that many Catholics in our diocese will wish to respond with contributions for us to send."

Father William Flynn, diocesan chancellor, is also the head of the local offices of Catholic Relief Services. Contributions toward the relief effort should be sent to him at Pastoral Center, 1150 Buffalo Road, Rochester, N.Y. 14624.
