

Catholic High Schools Expect Successful School Year

Though America's bicentennial year is drawing to a close, this year's Catholic Schools Week theme which emphasized the contributions of Catholic schools to the United States as well as the traditional American idea of parochial school education will be a continuing manifestation.

Regarding this aim, Brother William Stoldt, principal of Bishop Kearney High School, at that time stated, "By interrelating the basic concepts of the Founding Fathers and the aims of Catholic Education, we can render a new service to our country by creating a Declaration of Interdependence that calls America to religious and moral idealism, and therefore to genuine greatness. Catholic Schools manifest this Declaration of Interdependence by having two traditions which shape our educational philosophy — we are both American and Catholic."

As the high schools open in September, this philosophy will be carried out not only through their academic offerings but also in the values taught which produce a moral, religious and patriotic maturity in our young adults.

AQUINAS

An elective one semester Regional History course for juniors and seniors is being introduced in the Aquinas Institute curriculum this September. The course's objective is to make students more aware and knowledgeable of their community, and the class will be directed by Father Steven Martin.

Faculty additions include Dennis Noelki, Math; John Baynes, English; Gregory Missell, Science and Math; and Fathers Joseph Miller and Edward Heidt, English and Theology.

The freshman class which numbers 220 is an increase in freshman enrollment over 1975.
