AS I SEE IT

Pat Costa

If one ever needed proof that life-long exercise is the key to a vigorous old age, all we have to do is take a look at this country's dancers.

In recent months we have watched Fred Astaire well into his seventies, and Gene Kelly, a very young 60, demonstrate that the careers they pursued as younger men have stood them in good stead as they have reached their golden years. The two stars of "That's Entertainment, Part II" have shown up on more than one TV show plugging the film and doing some fancy footwork besides.

Then the other night, my viewing companion summoned me to the TV set to see what Ray Bolger is doing on the Boston Pops.

It turned out that what Bolger, now age 72, was doing was delighting Pops conductor Arthur Fiedler and driving the audience wild.

For 40 minutes the stage and film dancer-actor-comedian sang, danced, joked and generally cavorted about the rim of the stage with the abandon of a man 40 years younger.

He re-enacted his famous scarecrow from "The Wizard of Oz" half mockingly, half sincerely moaning that he was not in on any of the residuals of the 40-year-old film but delighted, he said, that he was part of an American classic.

Don't feel too bad for him, he indicated, because he noted he "had another song". And with that he launched into a parody of "Once in Love with Amy" which he sang a thousand times on Broadway in the long running "Charley's Aunt" which had everybody choked with laughter.

At the end they gave him a standing ovation and both the dignified Fiedler and Bolger retreated finally to the wings.

wearing straw hat and homburg and doing the comic stiff kneed walk.

Before viewers get the chance of seeing what the new series will be this fall, they are having the opportunity of seeing what they won't be.

All three networks have been screening pilot situation comedies that failed to make the grade.

I've seen three "Local 306" about a plumbers' union featured Eugene Roche as the union steward. Roche is familiar to TV viewers even if they don't recognize his name. He's the restaurant dishwasher that depends on "Ajax" and always ends up "professionally speaking". Eugene will obviously just have to go on washing dishes for a while. He had a lot of help from familiar character actors but the writers forgot a fairly important ingredient: a plot.

"SNAFU" the word derived from the first letters of Situation Normal, All Fouled Up, featured Tony Roberts in a World War II comedy which portrayed the Germans as a bunch of lovable, bumbling bird-brains. Enough said.

"Flatbush Avenue J" adapted from the film "The Lords of Flatbush" centered around those kids who never left Brooklyn after high school. Brooke Adams as a gum-chewing young married who wants a puce living room set of furniture finally pressures her police officer husband into the purchase with the help of friends. Attractive young actors. Not so attractive plot.

2 Win Grants To Dartmouth

Amy Ladd of Pittsford and Paula Ness of Penfield, who will be members of the class of 1980, were named recipients of Dartmouth Rochester Regional Scholarships for 1976. It was announced by Richard C. Portland, president of the Dartmouth Alumni Club of Rochester.

They join William Gefell, Class of 1977, of Rochester, who has held the scholarship since his freshman year.

The scholarship was instituted in 1929 by the Dartmouth Club and during the 27 years of its operation has disbursed over $20,000, enabling nine undergraduates to pursue their education at the college. The fund now has assets totalling $40,000.

CAST CALL
