THE OPEN WINDOW

Fr. Louis Hohman

Dear Father Hohman,

I do not make it a habit of writing anonymously, but, perhaps, after reading the question, you will understand my reasons for doing so. I beg your forgiveness for my cowardice.

What advice would you, Father, give to a young woman, age twenty, Catholic though not practicing, college educated, WHITE — who believes herself in love with a young Negro man.

I am torn between convincing myself that I am not prejudiced and convincing myself that what my daughter is about to do is not the right thing for her, for her parents and for her brothers and sisters. Life alone is tough enough, married life even tougher. Why deliberately stack the cards against oneself. — But, I'm not prejudiced, Father — am I????

How, considering the teachings of the Catholic Church, can the omnipotent advise against such a relationship — man is created equal, regardless of color. — But, should I advise my daughter to go ahead with this relationship? Happiness in this world is a very human goal — can one realistically shun society, its man-made rules, and be happy? I wonder.

Please advise, Father, and thanks.

Signed,
A reader, a Catholic, a mother.

Dear Reader, Catholic, Mother,

Your letter is really very beautiful and especially your concern for looking at all human beings the way God does. It would be a much more beautiful world if everyone could see every human being as the beautiful creation of God our Father and respect those people.

The answer to your question however, involves, as you point out, some very real problems for your daughter and her fiance. The basic issue here as far as their getting married is concerned is whether or not they would be mutually capable of bearing all the weight of society's reaction to their union. Some people are quite capable of doing this and for them we issue a resounding hurrah. But others are not all that strong and it could be a real tragedy if their love turned into a kind of bitterness toward one another and toward the society in which they live.

As far as your advice to her is concerned, I personally would simply point out to her the issue not of race but rather the issue of her strength. There's not much more than that you can do and if you start giving advice in terms of making demands or rejecting the person if your advice is rejected then you'll be in a peck of trouble. If she can be led to see that there are a lot of factors involved that will call for great strength on her part and on the part of the man she wants to marry then that's about all you can do. The rest will be up to them with God helping.
