Mary Played Great Role

Editor:

"Authentic, Marion Devotion" the title of Bishop Hogan's column rates a few cheers. He notes the Pope's concern about those who either scorn Mary or go to the other extreme, have devotion filled with sentimentality and superstition and who need be warned that "devotion to Mary has to be in the spirit of the Gospel."

Mary was there in all places of Jesus' life in the background. To follow her example is to point to Jesus in the foreground. Could anyone who worships God, praises Him, beseeches God to answer prayer through Jesus be less than pleasing to Mary? Not since Mary was and is a compass pointing to Jesus. Have we attributed human jealousy here?

Only in a hidden way is Mary Mediatrix of all graces and Co-redemptrix. If we wish to esteem her this highly at least let us not force others who have no such understanding into a lesser place than our own. St. Paul says "Faith in Jesus Christ leads to Salvation." As we come to know Jesus more we come to realize the great role Mary had and we see her as one to imitate.

Mary never elbowed God out, made speeches, preached, led parades, or condemned. Her life was to serve Jesus and be there for Him, to give Glory to God. When we read the Magnificat, it is God who is magnified and it is Mary's humility and lowliness that caused God to raise her to the greatest heights. Mary has no need of our esteem, we have need of her. Some of the literature supposedly written in her behalf will never gain great Christian momentum, even Mary couldn't want it — for it preaches our better way, not hers.
