RapAround Representative Government Action

BY JOAN M. SMITH

High school students pursuing their daily school routines may notice a change in policy here, or a revamp of a system there, but few give little thought as to how these transformations come about.

Over at St. Agnes High School there is an operative organization which as its members boast, "is a worthwhile and workable group" — the Student Senate. This student body uses its expertise and resources in involving itself in student needs and desires.

The Senate is made up of two representatives from each homeroom who are elected to their positions. A few of these reps, Sue Doran, Renee Morris, Sue Malley and Mary Ellen Gavin were on hand, recently, to discuss their duties with RapAround.

"It's important," commented Sue Doran, "to bring ideas back to the homeroom from the Senate meetings, get the student imput on these ideas and then take it back to the next meeting."

Weekly meetings are held with the group's moderator, theology teacher Paula Gager, and it's officers: Jeanette OuYang, president; Denise Ducci, vice president; Mary Anne Greco, treasurer; Mary Ellen Hickey, secretary.

But these working sessions are not the only duties of the organization's members. They are also responsible for various activities throughout the school year such as dances, issue assemblies, and baked food sales. One of their most recent innovations is the Clean Up the Trash Program (CUT). The idea was formulated last year by the Senate and then went into full action this year.

Enthusiastic about their commitment are St. Agnes Student Senate homeroom representatives: Mary Ellen Gavin, sophomore; Renee Morris, freshman; Sue Malley, senior; Sue Doran, junior. They are not only kept busy with representing their individual homerooms but also serve on the various committees for school activities throughout the year.

Other accomplishments chalked up by this organization are the dress down day and school jackets. Now facing it is the reformation of the detention system. Members are in the process of acquainting themselves with the present rules and will then make suggested changes to this particular area.

The reps have put a lot of time and effort into their duties. Why? "Because there were a lot of things I wanted to do something about," stated Sue Malley, and Renee said "I wanted to become involved."

They all agreed that serving in this type organization has been a learning experience. Mary Ellen pointed out she has learned a great deal about the proper meeting procedures because the group operates under Robert's Rules of Parliamentary Procedure.

But Sue Doran expressed everyone's opinion when she emphasized that students should have a say in how a school is run. "If we can get their ideas and make changes," she declared, "it's all to the good."

First Year Coach at Mooney Makes Section 5 Competition

By JOHN DOSER

No coach is going to come right out and say his team is going to win the sectional championship, but it is a fact that Cardinal Mooney girls' basketball coach Kathy Krenzer feels a lot better for her team's chances today than she did just last week.

That's because Mooney turned back Franklin High in a battle of unbeatens, 55-45, and firmly established itself as one of the contenders for the girls' Section 5, Class A crown.

Krenzer, in her first year as Mooney head coach, has seen her club emerge victorious through its first 12 games.

She says Franklin was Mooney's toughest opponent, but to the Cardinals' credit, Mooney beat Franklin on the Quakers' own floor; a rematch was scheduled after this story was written — at Mooney.

While it is Krenzer's first season at Mooney, it isn't her first as a girls' cage coach; she previously taught and coached at Pavilion Central, but she admits her won-loss record there was much less impressive.

The chief reason for Mooney's success this season, Krenzer believes, is the team's defense.

Who's responsible? "All of them," she answers.

"All of them" includes juniors Mary Ellen Hart and Charlyn Arnell, senior Meg Tuttle, junior Mary Jo Poinan, sophomore Marie Reber, senior Lynn Kirchmaier and sophomore Debbie Berl.

Tuttle and Poinan are the team's leading scorers.

Tuttle averages about 18 points per game, in addition to 17 rebounds and from six to ten assists.

If Tuttle has a problem, Krenzer says, it's that she genuinely plays an unselfish game, preferring to pass off frequently instead of shooting herself.

Poinan is scoring about 12 points and grabbing 12 rebounds per game.

Offensively, Mooney is averaging about 50 points per game while holding opponents to about 35.

Franklin's 45 points was the highest output scored against Mooney all season (as this was written).

"Many people tell me that Franklin is a favorite for sectionals," Krenzer says. "Last year I think they made the finals."

Defense is a trademark of Mooney's boys' teams coached by Ed Nietopski.

"That's where our defense came from," Krenzer says.

"He's given us a lot of help on defense; he deserves much of the credit."

Sometimes it pays to have a snowstorm; the day of the Big Superstorm last month prevented Krenzer from getting to school and Nietopski handled both the boys' and girls' varsities that afternoon.

"That was a good day (for our girls); although Mr. Nietopski worked more on offense than defense," she says.

There are 21 team members on the Mooney roster because there is no JV team.

Four others who see a lot of action include sophomores Mary Ann Rhodes, Cathy Boughton, Lauri Pressley, Paula Sanguedolce and freshman Monica Zorsch.

"I have a lot of sophomores who are really going to be good basketball players," Krenzer says.

And her sophomores are gaining a lot of experience because the first thing Krenzer does when Mooney earns an appreciable lead, is to empty the bench.

In a recent game where Mooney won by better than 30 points, Krenzer's starters played less than five minutes and the second string logged less than a quarter.

The rest of the squad, mostly sophomores, got a lot of playing time.

The only player Krenzer says the team will really miss is Tuttle who has plans to possibly attend Nazareth College.

Krenzer says she doesn't look too far ahead; she says Mooney plays one game at a time.
