The Future of Business

The Junior Achievement organization was on the sales scene recently. Their trade fair was held in Midtown Plaza where the companies, managed by area high school students, sold the results of a year's production. Items ranged from metered lamps, to pen and pencil sets, to hanging plants and jewelry. Next event on the busy business peoples' agenda will be the annual banquet to be held on Wednesday, May 11 at the Dome Arena. Scholarships to aid in the future education of the students plus awards and trophies will be presented to winning officers and members of the 50 JA companies. In top photo, Margaret Schaefer from Nazareth and Pat Taenzer of Irondequoit High are happy with their company's sales. A Surprise Gift For Fellow Students

It's more fun than work as Lisa and Barb prepare for broadcasting over WTNT

BY JOAN M. SMITH

On Monday, April 18, St. Agnes students went about their daily routine unaware of the surprise in store for them the next day. They knew about the assembly and its code name 'radio mystery' which was being sponsored by the school's radio station WTNT but were totally in the dark about the purpose.

Since early October, station president Lisa Petote and vice president Barbara Attridge along with the station's 20 staff members fairly burst with a secret they had negotiated for their fellow classmates. Lisa and Barbara sparked with mischievous excitement as they talked to RapAround, in whispers, about their coup de theatre — a concert featuring the popular Duke Jupiter group.

"We felt we wanted to do something for the whole school," stated Lisa. So station members along with their moderator Bette Geen put their heads together and the idea for the surprise was hatched.

After receiving the green light from the administration, they concentrated their efforts in locating the entertainers. They called radio stations and CMF informed them of a production agency which handled Duke Jupiter. A contract was formulated and the cost of the guest appearance determined. According to Lisa, once the contract was signed WTNT was committed which led to weeks of frenzied activity, including meetings to develop fund raising events.

"When you tell people you have to raise $200 they sort of fall over," declared Lisa, "but we did it," she triumphantly added.

During the past few months WTNT sponsored a record raffle, two baked food sales, and in conjunction with the Student Senate a dress down day when for $.25 a student could wear jeans. Profits were shared by the two organizations.

"The effect is going to be shock," laughed Lisa, "and the reward will be tomorrow."

"But," interjected Barb, "all the nerves are today to see if everything goes alright."

And things went perfectly according to the feedback from Barbara. It was a big surprise even though about 20 students saw the group come into the school.

An excited Katie Krenzer said she was 'zapped' when she walked into the auditorium and noticed the huge amplifiers and realized what was about to take place.

"It was great," she said "to let your hair down." She classified it as an exciting change from the ordinary school assembly and thought it "fantastic" that it was her fellow students who planned the whole scene.

Lisa and Barb, both juniors, were ecstatic about their accomplishment. They are no less enthused about their work with the radio station. In fact Barb intends to take a minor in communications in college and Lisa, although headed for a Math major, hopes to become involved in college radio work. They enjoy planning the music programs heard over WTNT in the mornings along with the weather, and thoughts for the day.

One thing is certain, their names along with WTNT will go down in school history for their contribution to the community spirit of their school.

Youth Board Advisors

Sue Thomas and Theresa Kusak, juniors at St. Agnes High School, serve on the Monroe County Youth Advisory Board. They explained the Youth Board's job as given input into the decisions of where Monroe County's funds for the various youth agencies are to go.

Youth Board members keep the adults in touch with what today's youth really need. They also visit and talk with many agencies to find out how they work and if they're doing their job. If the students find them working and successful, they advise funding during the coming year.

Sue and Theresa find their job educational and they enjoy getting in touch with their community.
