ALL IN THE FAMILY

Sarah Child

As one lovely summer day after another unfolds it is difficult to remain indoors for any period of time. Any chores that can be moved from the confines of the house have been.

Laundry is folded on the picnic table under the two sycamores, cooking and serving are done on the patio and even a hall door has been taken off its hinges and carried out to the back yard to receive a new coat of paint.

Now the typewriter is on the back porch, the clackety clack joining the sounds of summer, which in this case come from three bulldozers in the field to our right, a carpenter building on a porch for our neighbors to the rear left and a malfunctioning pool filter to the east that whines with the intensity of an artillery shell.

Only the bulldozers are disturbing. The noise is a minor thing. Through an opening between the large beech on the far end of the yard and the poplars which border the lot line it is possible to see not so small trees and bushes being upended with one push of the machinery. The muffled boom of explosives adds to the frenzied scene and each new clamor of equipment sends birds upward, in frantic climb.

The homes, we are told, will be luxury models, as if that should take the sting out. Yet we cannot protest without seeming hypocrisy. Our own place, with its beloved back yard, was carved from a cornfield five short years ago. This morning over coffee we counted 40 trees and innumerable bushes we have planted since then. Some large, some tiny, but all designed to bring back a wooded environment and nesting places for pheasants and other creatures that dart across the open yard at dusk and shortly after sunrise.

The yard itself is richly satisfying in its quiet beauty. For the first four years each season has been taken up with putting in the permanent plantings. This year at last there was time to choose the flowers. Now the verbena with tiny red flowers is making an unrivaled show. Ditto the red and pink of the dianthus, the orange of the zinnias, the yellow and brown of gloriosa daisies. Under the shade of the honeysuckle the purple johnny-jumpups are thriving. So too is a clump next to the verbena. Who said red and violet do not mix?

We spend another week of vacation at home and somehow the day trips we planned earlier do not materialize. East, west, home (at least this time of year) is definitely best.

Therapist Takes Final Mercy Vows

Sister Sue Ann Dunford, an occupational therapist at St. Joseph's Hospital, Elmira, made her final profession of vows as a Sister of Mercy on Aug. 6. The ceremony took place at the Carmelite Monastery in Waverly.

Sister Sue Ann entered the Mercy order in 1967, after her graduation from Cardinal Mooney High School. In 1974 she received a BS degree in occupational therapy from SUNY Buffalo and the Dean's Award in that department of the School of Health and Related Professions. She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John E. Dunford of McGuire Road, Rochester.
